"Ask any broker what the most important real estate publication is and you'll always get the same answer–The New York Times. The reason is simple: The Times is the source for real estate news and advertising."

"Brown, Harris, Stevens has maintained a leadership position in the New York real estate market by being innovative. And The Times shares our dedication to innovation. Last year, for instance, we became the first advertiser to run a two-page, full-color spread in the Luxury Homes and Estates advertising feature of The New York Times Magazine.

"The response was absolutely tremendous. A number of sales resulted directly from that ad, and we learned again just how effective advertising in The Times can be.

"No other publication brings buyers and sellers together like The New York Times. It's the driving force in real estate advertising."

Hall F. Wilkie, Senior Vice President
Brown, Harris, Stevens

The One Thing We Don't Discount is Ambition.

The Conway Organization is undergoing a very serious and exhilarating growth period. We're adding lots of stores. Our success has surpassed even our highest expectations. One reason for this expansion is due to the vital efforts of our staff: General Managers, Assistant General Managers and Buyers.

Store General Managers

It takes a lot of talent to be a key executive in the management of a fast-paced retail operation. Your involvement is total. It includes merchandising, financial planning, staff development/empowerment and P&L responsibility. It also takes vision. Creativity. And a willingness to accomplish what others just think about. You must have a college degree and solid high-volume retail management experience, preferably in a multi-store environment.

Ladies Sportswear Buyer

Assertiveness. Resilience. Impressive planning and analysis skills. These attributes will come in handy as you work directly with existing vendors and develop new ones. You'll develop a private label campaign, and use your uncanny fashion sense to be narrow and deep in key items. High-volume buying experience a must.

In return, we offer a salary and benefits package that will reflect your talent, and heavy-duty support. Not promises. Please send your confidential resue, with salary history and requirements, indicating position of interest, to: Don Uebbing, Director of Human Resources, The Conway Organization, One Penn Plaza, 38th Floor, New York, NY 10119. Fax: 212/967-6740. We are an Equal Opportunity Employer.

BUYER
INFANTS & TODDLERS

New Jersey's most "unique" Specialty Department Store is seeking a "unique" buyer for our "GRANDMA'S SHOP". Our department showcases fine and unusual merchandise for Layette, Infants & Toddlers—apparel, accessories, toys and much, much more and we are seeking a buyer with the imagination and taste to manage and buy for it.

Ideal candidate may have owned his/her own children's shop (or dreamed of owning one) or have worked in a fine infants and toddlers department or specialty store and would like to work in an exciting and imaginative proprietary environment.

Please submit resume, including salary history, in confidence to:

The Visual Merchandising Executive At Macy's

Macy's is more than a store. It's a classic name in retailing known coast-to-coast for its quality merchandise. And, right now at Macy's Menlo Park, challenging opportunity awaits an experienced visual professional.

To qualify, you must possess excellent communications and organizational skills and be a self-styled entrepreneur determined to excel. We are seeking candidates with 2-5 years of retail visual merchandising experience, exceptional taste levels, a good sense of color and balance, an in-depth knowledge of fashion styling, and men's riggins, as well as home design. Strong vendor rapport, theater prop setting background and/or store design experience a plus.

If you'd rather set trends than follow them and would like to experience exciting growth potential with an unsurpassed leader, send your resume with salary history to: Macy's-East, Executive Personnel, Dept. V-MP, 17th Floor, 151 West 34th Street, New York, NY 10001. We will respond to those candidates in whom we have an interest. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Heroin, $15 a fix. But one analysis has shown that drug users incur 300% higher medical costs and benefits.

IF YOU THINK DRUGS ARE EXPENSIVE ON THE STREET, YOU SHOULD SEE WHAT THEY COST AT WORK.

Cocaine, $60 per gram. But an employee with a drug habit will miss weeks more work on average. That costs your business money.

Speed, $10 a rush. But drug-using employees are 3 times more likely to be late for work, which slows down your entire operation.

Crack, $10 a hit. But drug users have more on-the-job accidents and file twice as many workers comp claims. The average disability injury costs an employer $12,600.

Marijuana, $2 a joint. And 20% of young workers admit using marijuana on the job. Imagine what that costs your company in lost productivity and mistakes.

PCP, $13 a pop. Drug use is so prevalent that 1/3 of employees know of the sale of drugs in their workplace. That's bad for morale, and bad for profits.

LSD, $7 a blotter. But drug users are 47% more likely to lose their jobs based purely on poor performance. The average cost to replace a salaried worker? $7,000.

The facts are not pretty: 1 in every 12 American workers is a current drug user. For employees between ages 18 and 34, the rate of drug use is even worse.

Think it's not a problem at your company? You could be making a very costly mistake. Fortunately, establishing a drug-free workplace isn't as hard or as expensive as you'd expect. In fact, the first step—a written company drug policy—costs nothing and takes just minutes.

Act now. Call the Drugs Don't Work helpline at 1-800-883-DRUG to find out how to set up a drug-free workplace in your company. And put drugs out of your business.

PUBLIC AUCTION NOTICE OF FORECLOSURE SALE OF COOPERATIVE APARTMENTS

BY VIRTUE OF DEFAULTS UNDER that certain Note, that certain Credit Agreement and that certain Security Agreement each dated August 1, 1988 (collectively, the "Security Agreement") made by 763 Ocean Parkway Associates (the "Debtor") to Bank Leumi Trust Company of New York (the "Secured Party");

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Secured Party, by Steven M. Birbach, Licensed Auctioneer, DCA No. 846375, will sell the collateral hereafter described at a Public Auction on May 16, 1993.

Said Public Auction will commence at 1:00 P.M. at La Mer, 1060 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, New York at which time the following collateral will be sold:

The respective 7,437 shares (collectively, the "Shares") of capital stock of 763 Ocean Parkway Corp. (the "Co-op Corp.") attributable to the apartments listed below (collectively, the "Apartments"), all located at either 763 Ocean Parkway or 869 East 7th Street, Brooklyn, New York (collectively, the "Premises"), together with the respective proprietary leases (the "Leases") appurtenant thereto. Some of the Apartments may be vacant and the remaining Apartments may be subject to leases to tenants in occupancy.

The Shares and Leases to be sold and the Apartments to which they relate are as follows:

763 Ocean Parkway

Apartment 1A, 78 Shares; 2A-79; 3A-80; 4A-81; 5A-82; 6A-83; 1B-78; 4B-81; 5B-82; 6B-83; 1C-111; 2C-112; 3C-113; 5C-115; 6C-116; 2D-79; 3D-80; 2E-68; 4E-70; 5E-71; 2F-78; 3F-79; 4F-80; 5F-81; 2G-79; 3G-80; 1H-75; 2H-76; 4H-78; 5H-79; 6H-80; 1J-78; 5J-82; 6J-83; 1K-78; 2K-79; 3K-80; 6K-83.

All the Shares, together with all of the Debtor's right, title and interest in and to the Leases for all the Apartments, will be sold as individual units, with the sales of the individual units being held consecutively.

The purchase price for the above described collateral shall be payable as follows: a deposit of ten (10%) percent of a successful bid is required with the successful bid, of which not more than $4,000 of such deposit for a vacant Apartment and $1,000 of such deposit for an occupied Apartment shall be by cash or by certified check drawn upon a New York City bank with the balance of the deposit, if any, by non-certified check drawn on a New York City bank. The balance of the purchase price shall be payable by cash or certified check drawn upon a New York City bank within thirty (30) days of the sale. The sale shall be subject to the further conditions set forth in the terms of sale which are available, upon request, from Warshaw Burstein Cohen Schlesinger & Kuh, and such revisions thereto as may be announced at the start of the auction. The Shares and the Leases may be inspected at the offices of Warshaw Burstein Cohen Schlesinger & Kuh immediately prior to the sale.

The Secured Party reserves the right to bid, to become the purchaser at the sale and, without deposit, to credit against the purchase price all sums due to it under the Security Agreement and to adjourn, delay or terminate the sale.

Please direct all inquiries with respect to the collateral to:

20th Century Fox

"A Tree Grows in Brooklyn": Coming of age.

FAMILY, friends and neighborhoods are at the center of some choice film dramas on on television this week.

Another splendid, sensitive family study, Irving Rapper's ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN (1941), offers an unusual (for Hollywood) look at a Protestant minister (Fredric March), his brood and his congregation. Adroitly culled from Hartzell Spence's memoir, the picture is touching, amusing and wonderfully well rounded. Martha Scott, Beulah Bondi, Elizabeth Fraser and others shine in a large well-chosen cast — Monday at 9 A.M. on Showtime.

Alfred Hitchcock always called SHADOW OF A DOUBT (1943) his favorite thriller. No dark trickery or cross-country chasing here. It's sunlit, small-town Americana, and the simple, deadly duel of a gentleman killer (Joseph Cotton) and his wise niece (Teresa Wright). Watch for the night scene of her race to a library (as Dimitri Tiomkin's music pulsates), and their wordless, stairway square-off. It's brilliantly spun. The writing credits may surprise you — Saturday at 2:40 P.M. on TNT.

RASHOMON (1951) is back. And somehow the wonders of Akira Kurosawa's stark masterpiece — the thunderbolt that put the Japanese film industry on the movie map — never dim. This time, as the enigmatic tale of rape and murder in a forest unfolds, catch the music. It's barely noticeable: a steady, hissing bolero that coils through the proceedings like a menacing mist — Saturday at 10 P.M. on Channel 13.

★ CABIN IN THE SKY (1943). Ethel Waters, Eddie Anderson, Lena Horne. Slow start, then blooms nicely, as on Broadway. Good score, yummy Lena and Minnelli's first direction. (2 hrs.) TMC, Thu 12:30 P.M., Thu/EarlyFri 3 A.M.

★ CAREFREE (1938). Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Ralph Bellamy, Luella Gear. Neat psychoanalysis gimmick, grand Berlin score. Best: "Change Partners." But don't overlook "Color Blind." (1½ hrs.) AMC, Mon 2 P.M., Mon/EarlyTu 1 A.M.

CASUAL SEX? (1988). Lea Thompson, Victoria Jackson. Giddy young women after "cute boys." Basically "Where the Boys Are" with trendy candor. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sat 3 P.M.

THE CHALLENGE (1939). Robert Douglas, Luis Trenker. Competitive climbers up the Matterhorn in 1865. (2 hrs.) CUNY, Sun 11 P.M.

CHAPTER TWO (1979). James Caan, Marsha Mason. Playwright's second marriage, via Neil Simon. Better on Broadway. Caan miscast but Marsha's darling. (PG) (2¼ hrs.) HBO, Mon 3:30 P.M., Sat noon.

THE CHASE (1966). Marlon Brando, Jane Fonda, Robert Redford, Angie Dickinson. Florid, sourish melodrama of manhunt in corrupt community. Unappetizing, but for sheriff Brando and fugitive Redford. (3 hrs.) TNT, Tu/EarlyWed 1:30 A.M.

THE CHEYENNE SOCIAL CLUB (1970). James Stewart, Henry Fonda, Shirley Jones. Not really a club at all. That's the one long joke. The boys try. (PG) (2 hrs.) TBS, Mon 11 P.M.

CLASS OF 1999 (1990). Bradley Gregg, Traci Lind. Warring student gangs vs. disciplinary androids. (R) (1 hr. 40 mins.) SHO, Thu 10:05 P.M.

THE CLONING OF JOANNA MAY (1992). Patricia Hodge, Brian Cox. Englishwoman learns spouse cloned her. From a Fay Weldon novel. (1 hr.) A&E, Sun 11 P.M., Sun/EarlyMon 3 A.M. (Part 2)

COACH (1978). Cathy Lee Crosby, Michael Biehn. Attractive female athlete pilots high school basketball team. Predictable. (PG) (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Sun 4:15 P.M.

COBRA (1986). Sylvester Stallone, Brigitte Nielsen, Reni Santoni. L.A. sleuth stalks slasher. Real cheese. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Tu 8 P.M.

COCOON: THE RETURN (1988). Don Ameche, Wilford Brimley. Disappointing sequel. (PG) (1 hr. 55 mins.) TMC, Sun 2:40 P.M., 10:30 P.M., Fri 7:35 A.M., Fri/EarlySat 3 A.M. (CC)

COLOSSUS: THE FORBIN PROJECT (1970). Eric Braeden, Susan Clark. A giant computer. Nothing to get excited about. (PG) (2 hrs.) AMC, Thu 8:30 A.M.

★ COMING HOME (1978). Jane Fonda, Jon Voight, Bruce Dern. Strong, stinging triangle of wife and Vietnam vets. (R) (2 hrs. 10 mins.) HBO, Thu/EarlyFri 4:10 A.M. (CC)

COMMITTED (1991). Jennifer O'Neill, Robert Forster. Nurse tricked into mental institution as patient. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Thu 8 P.M.

CONSOLATION MARRIAGE (1931). Irene Dunne, Pat O'Brien. Marital drama, from the good old days. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Mon 7 A.M.

THE COTTON CLUB (1984). Richard Gere, Gregory Hines, Diane Lane, Lonette McKee, Bob Hoskins. Glittery but empty drama of famed 30's Harlem night spot. Some juicy music. (R) (2½ hrs.) Ch. 7, Sat/EarlySun 2 A.M.

COUSINS (1989). Ted Danson, Isabella Rossellini. Tender adultery tilts two families. Passably diverting but the French original less cluttered, with better leads. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) HBO, Tu 9 A.M., Sat 4 P.M.

CRACKERS (1984). Donald Sutherland, Jack Warden, Sean Penn. Extremely arch heist comedy. A Louis Malle mistake. (PG) (2 hrs.) USA, Thu/EarlyFri 3 A.M.

★ CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS (1989). Martin Landau, Anjelica Huston, Woody Allen, Alan Alda, Mia Farrow. Upper- middle-class family orbit. Allen's most securely serious and funny film to date. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) SHO, Sat noon (CC)

CRITICAL CONDITION (1987). Richard Pryor, Rachel Ticotin. Doctor at a New York hospital. Scattered laughs but generally a frantic mess. (R) (1 hr. 55 mins.) TMC, Tu 1:35 P.M., midnight, Sat 5 P.M., Sat/EarlySun 3 A.M. (CC)

CROSSING THE LINE (1990). Liam Neeson, Joanne Whalley-Kilmer. Out-of-work Scottish miner turns bare-knuckle brawler. Good start but done in by high-mindedness and awful dialogue. (R) (1 hr. 55 mins.) SHO, Sat/EarlySun 4:05 A.M.

THE CUTTING EDGE (1992). D.B. Sweeney, Moira Kelly. Bickering figure skaters aim for Olympics. Formula but well-paced and snappily played. (PG) (2 hrs.) SHO, Mon 11 A.M., 8 P.M. (CC)

D

★ DANCE WITH A STRANGER (1984). Miranda Richardson, Rupert Everett. Gritty drama of doomed, worldly London woman, superbly played by Miranda. (R) (2 hrs.) BRV, Sun 8 P.M., Sun/EarlyMon 2:30 A.M., Fri 11 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 4 A.M.

★ DARK OBSESSION (1989). Gabriel Byrne, Amanda Donohoe, Douglas Hodge. Wan British aristocrat in hot water. Best for sharply satirical detail of character and background. (NC-17) (1 hr. 40 mins.) MAX, Fri/EarlySat 12:50 A.M.

★ THE DAY AFTER (1983). Jason Robards, JoBeth Williams, Steve Guttenberg, John Lithgow. Nuclear-bombing aftermath in Kansas. Stark, piercing drama. No nonsense. (2 hrs.) LIFE, Mon 9 P.M.

DAYBREAK (1993). Cuba Gooding Jr., Moira Kelly. In futuristic America, two fall in love while fighting a repressive quarantine. (1½ hrs.) HBO, Tu 8 P.M., Fri 6:30 P.M. (CC)

★ DEAD OF NIGHT (1945). Mervyn Johns, Michael Redgrave, Googie Withers, Sally Ann Howes. Pioneer British package of occult yarns and still champ. (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Sat 6:30 A.M.

DEADLY INTENTIONS (1985). Michael Biehn, Madolyn Smith. Doctor-husband's dark side emerges. (1 hr. 55 mins.) Ch. 7, Wed/EarlyThu 12:05 A.M. (Part 1); Thu/EarlyFri 12:05 A.M. (Part 2)

★ THE DEADLY TOWER (1975). Kurt Russell, John Forsythe, Richard Yniguez. Rounded, factual suspense about Texas sniper. Tight and tingling. (2 hrs.) TNT, Sat 11 P.M.

DEATH OF A CENTERFOLD: THE DOROTHY STRATTEN STORY (1981). Jamie Lee Curtis, Bruce Weitz. No more, no less. Tawdry, sad Hollywood fable. (2 hrs.) TNT, Sat 9 P.M.

DELIVER US FROM EVIL (1973). George Kennedy, Jan-Michael Vincent. And money. Greed on a hunting trip. Let it slide. (1½ hrs.) TBS, Sat 10:05 P.M.

★ THE DELTA FORCE (1986). Chuck Norris, Lee Marvin, Martin Balsam. Arab hijack of Rome-bound plane. Quite colorful and credible. (R) (2 hrs. 45 mins.) TBS, Thu 8:05 P.M.

DELTA FORCE 3 (1991). Nick Cassavetes, Eric Douglas. Terrorist armed with atomic bomb. Deafening, with few surprises. (R) (2 hrs.) SHO, Sat 10 P.M.

DENNIS THE MENACE (1987). Victor DiMattia, Patricia Estrin. Ketchum's comic-strip character tangles with publicity- seeking paleontologist. (1 hr. 35 mins.) DIS, Tu 6 P.M., Tu/EarlyWed 4:15 A.M.

★ DESIGN FOR LIVING (1933). Miriam Hopkins, Fredric March, Gary Cooper. Only casually moored to Coward's caviar but good, blithe fun all the same; via Lubitsch. Peachy opening. (2 hrs.) A&E, Sun 11 A.M.

D.O.A. (1988). Dennis Quaid, Daniel Stern, Meg Ryan. Disappointing remake of 1949 thriller about doomed man. Good Quaid but talky, obvious script. (R) (2 hrs.) USA, Fri 9 P.M.

★ DRAGON CHOW (1987). Basker, Ric Young, Buddy Uzzaman. Industrious illegal immigrants in a harsh Hamburg. Sad, graceful, eloquent drama. (1¼ hrs.) Ch. 13, Sat 11:30 P.M.

E

THE EBONY TOWER (1987). Laurence Olivier, Roger Rees, Greta Scacchi. Fowles novel about two British painters. Magnetic Olivier but teasing, not entirely credible drama. (1½ hrs.) BRV, Thu 11:30 P.M., Thu/EarlyFri 4:30 A.M.

18 AGAIN! (1988). George Burns, Charlie Schlatter. Body switch of octogenarian and grandson. Hobbles along genially, without much really happening. (PG) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sun 5 P.M.

★ ELEPHANT BOY (1937). Sabu, Walter Hudd. Good, exotic Kipling adventure, best now for the youngsters. (1 hr. 25 mins.) AMC, Tu 8:35 A.M., 1:35 P.M.

ENCHANTMENT (1949). David Niven, Teresa Wright, Jayne Meadows, Farley Granger. Old soldier reminisces about lost love. Tasteful, well acted and extremely moist. (2 hrs.) AMC, Thu 3 P.M., Fri 10 A.M.

★ ESCAPE FROM NEW YORK (1981). Kurt Russell, Donald Pleasence, Isaac Hayes, Ernest Borgnine. Savage, riveting fantasy of Manhattan as prison isle. (R) (2 hrs.) TNT, Sat/EarlySun 1 A.M.

★ EXODUS (1960). Paul Newman, Eva Marie Saint, Ralph Richardson, Lee J. Cobb. Emerging, war-torn Israel. Top-heavy, vividly colorful, fine cast. (3½ hrs.) SHO, Fri 11:30 A.M.

★ EXPERIMENT PERILOUS (1944). Hedy Lamarr, George Brent, Paul Lukas. Compelling psychological thriller. (1 hr. 35 mins.) AMC, Tu 7 A.M., noon.

F

FALLING FROM GRACE (1992). John Mellencamp, Mariel Hemingway, Claude Akins. Country star returns to Indiana town. Thoughtful but quietly static. (PG-13) (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Sun 8:15 A.M., Fri 11:15 A.M.

★ FAREWELL TO MANZANAR (1976). Yuki Shimoda, Nobu McCarthy. True drama of Japanese-American family's wartime internment. Beautifully handled. (1¾ hrs.) DIS, Wed/EarlyThu 1:20 A.M.

FAST-WALKING (1982). James Woods, Kay Lenz. A prison guard joins two plots: one to kill an activist inmate, one to help him escape. (R) (2 hrs.) HBO, Wed/EarlyThu 2:20 A.M., Sat/EarlySun 12:30 A.M.

★ FAT MAN AND LITTLE BOY (1989). Paul Newman, Dwight Schultz, Bonnie Bedelia. Behind the first atomic project: Gen. Groves and physicist Oppenheimer. Uneven but engrossing. Fine Paul and Dwight. (PG-13) (2¼ hrs.) HBO, Thu 4:30 P.M. (CC)

FATAL EXPOSURE (1991). Mare Winningham, Nick Mancuso. Wrong photographs put woman in touch with hit man's next target in Pacific Northwest. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) USA, Sun 8 P.M. (CC)

THE FEAR INSIDE (1992). Christine Lahti, Dylan McDermott, Jennifer Rubin. Suspense thriller about agoraphobic artist held hostage by two killers. (R) (2 hrs.) SHO, Wed 8 P.M.

A FISTFUL OF DOLLARS (1964). Clint Eastwood, Marianne Koch. Spaghetti sauce would have helped. (2 hrs.) SHO, Mon 6 P.M. (CC)

★ FLYING DOWN TO RIO (1933). Gene Raymond, Dolores Del Rio, Raul Roulien, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers. Silly beyond words but saved by Youmans's grand score and marginal Fred and Ginger. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Mon 3:30 P.M., Mon/EarlyTu 2:30 A.M.

FOOLS OF FORTUNE (1990). Iain Glen, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, Julie Christie. Sad romantic melodrama of strife-torn Ireland. Sincere but stuffed with contrivance. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) TMC, Wed 8:30 A.M., Wed/EarlyThu 5 A.M.

● FOR THE LOVE OF MY CHILD: THE ANISSA AYALA STORY (1993). Priscilla Lopez, Tony Perez. Parents of leukemia patient conceive child to provide suitable bone-marrow donor. (2 hrs.) Ch. 4, Mon 9 P.M.

★ FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT (1940). Joel McCrea, Laraine Day, Herbert Marshall, George Sanders. Marvelous vintage Hitchcock, sinister windmills to giant plane crash. The works, from the master. (2 hrs.) BRV, Tu 10 P.M., Tu/EarlyWed 4 A.M., Sat/EarlySun 12:30 A.M.

FOREVER YOUNG, FOREVER FREE (1975). Jose Ferrer Karen Valentine. South African boy follows white orphan pal to New York. Intriguing tale but much too sentimental. (G) (1½ hrs.) DIS, Tu 1 P.M., Tu/EarlyWed 2:45 A.M.

★ F/X (1986). Bryan Brown, Brian Dennehy, Diane Venora, Cliff De Young. Movie special-effects man tricked into crime web. Brightly original. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 55, Tu 8 P.M.

G

★ GHOST OF A CHANCE (1987). Dick Van Dyke, Redd Foxx. Angel orders honky-tonk piano player to haunt and guide wayward detective. (2 hrs.) LIFE, Thu 2 P.M.

★ A GIRL NAMED SOONER (1974). Lee Remick, Richard Crenna, Cloris Leachman, Susan Deer. Touching drama about adopted country child. Pleasant surprise. (2 hrs.) DIS, Sat 4 P.M., Sat/EarlySun 4 A.M.

GOING IN STYLE (1979). George Burns, Art Carney, Lee Strasberg. Elderly bank heist. Mild and not a little coy. (PG) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sun 1 P.M.

★ GOOD MORNING, VIETNAM (1987). Robin Williams, Forest Whitaker, Tung Thanh Tran. Armed Forces radio disk jockey in 1965 Saigon. Strong, entertaining star vehicle for Robin's cheeky brilliance. (R) (2 hrs.) TMC, Sat 11:30 A.M., 9 P.M. (CC)

THE GOOD MOTHER (1988). Diane Keaton, Liam Neeson, Jason Robards. Divorcee and new lover. Skittish heroine, drama curiously lacks feeling. Good newcomer Neeson. (R) (2 hrs.) USA, Sun 2 P.M.

★ GRAND CANYON (1991). Danny Glover, Kevin Kline, Steve Martin. Kasdan's L.A. tale of different economic, age and racial backgrounds. Off-beat, evocative and riveting, tho it pulls some punches. (R) (2¼ hrs.) MAX, Sun 9:30 P.M., Thu/EarlyFri 5 A.M. (CC)

THE GRASS IS ALWAYS GREENER OVER THE SEPTIC TANK (1978). Carol Burnett, Charles Grodin. City couple in suburbia. Medium but amiable. (1 hr. 55 mins.) Ch. 7, Mon/EarlyTu 12:05 A.M.

★ GRAVEYARD SHIFT (1990). David Andrews, Kelly Wolf. Night workers, via Stephen King. Uneven but not bad of this genre. Good, gritty edge, no-name cast. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sat 8 P.M.

★ THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD (1965). Max von Sydow, Charlton Heston, Carroll Baker, Sidney Poitier. Beautiful, moving pageantry but not the greatest as drama. (G) (3¼ hrs.) TMC, Mon/EarlyTu 4:35 A.M.

★ GROSS ANATOMY (1989). Matthew Modine, Daphne Zuniga, Christine Lahti. Med student's first year. Mostly funny and engaging, even with that title and some stock touches. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) SHO, Sat 6 P.M.

★ THE GROUP (1966). Joan Hackett, Candice Bergen, Shirley Knight, Elizabeth Hartman. Mary McCarthy's witches and weepers. Good show, effective cutting edge, same as the book. (2 hrs. 35 mins.) SHO, Thu 3:25 P.M.

H

★ THE HAUNTING (1963). Richard Johnson, Julie Harris, Claire Bloom, Russ Tamblyn. Rather weakly motivated but brilliantly spooky. What a house! (G) (2 hrs.) MAX, Fri 1 P.M.

★ HEAR MY SONG (1991). Ned Beatty, Adrian Dunbar, Shirley Anne Field. Irish tenor is focus of intrigue and blarney at Liverpool theater club. Deft, engrossing, flavorsome. (R) (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Thu/EarlyFri 12:20 A.M. (CC)

★ HEARTS OF DARKNESS: A FILMMAKER'S APOCALYPSE (1991). Behind the location camera at Coppola's "Apocalypse Now." Surprisingly candid and revealing. (R) (1 hr. 35 mins.) TMC, Fri 7:25 P.M.

THE HITMAN (1991). Chuck Norris, Michael Parks, Al Waxman. Spy in Mafia drug orbit. Splat, crunch, creepily atmospheric. (R) (1 hr. 35 mins.) SHO, Wed/EarlyThu 2:20 A.M.

HONG KONG (1951). Ronald Reagan, Rhonda Fleming. Yesterday's eggdrop soup. (2 hrs.) AMC, Thu 5 P.M., 11 P.M.

★ HOOK (1991). Dustin Hoffman, Robin Williams, Julia Roberts. Huge, crammed, what-if "Peter Pan" aftermath, via Spielberg. Best for kids who liked the Macy's-parade film balloon of "Annie." (PG) (2 hrs. 25 mins.) TMC, Sun 8:35 A.M., 8 P.M. (CC)

★ THE HORSE SOLDIERS (1959). John Wayne, William Holden, Constance Towers. Cliche-blunted script but still a sturdy John Ford Civil War. (2 hrs.) MAX, Mon 9 A.M. (CC)

HOT SPELL (1958). Shirley Booth, Anthony Quinn, Shirley MacLaine. Summer suds, up to here. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Fri 9:30 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 3 A.M.

HOW THE WEST WAS WON (1963). James Stewart, John Wayne, Carroll Baker, Debbie Reynolds, George Peppard. Bulging eyeful but short on substance, for all the commotion. (G) (2¾ hrs.) MAX, Sun 1:30 P.M.

I

I OUGHT TO BE IN PICTURES (1982). Walter Matthau, Ann-Margret. But not this one. Girl hopeful and estranged scenarist-father, via Neil Simon play. Doesn't click. (PG) (2 hrs.) MAX, Wed 4 P.M.

★ I WALKED WITH A ZOMBIE (1943). Frances Dee, Tom Conway, James Ellison. Nurse and Caribbean voodoo patient. Literate, tingling, beautifully photographed. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Tu/EarlyWed 4:30 A.M.

★ I WANT TO LIVE! (1958). Susan Hayward, Theodore Bikel, Simon Oakland. Shattering, superbly professional crime drama and Susan's peak. Great shady lady. (2 hrs. 5 mins.) SHO, Wed 2:55 P.M.

IN THE HEAT OF PASSION (1992). Sally Kirkland, Nick Corri. Psychiatrist obsessed with young would-be actor. Title tells it. (R) (1½ hrs.) HBO, Mon 8 P.M., Thu/EarlyFri 12:15 A.M.

★ IN THE HEAT OF THE NIGHT (1967). Sidney Poitier, Rod Steiger. Black Yankee sleuth on Southern murder case. Strong and stinging, best as psychological tug-of-war by superb Rod and Sid. (1 hr. 50 mins.) SHO, Sun/EarlyMon 5:10 A.M., Wed 8 A.M.

★ INDIANA JONES AND THE TEMPLE OF DOOM (1984). Harrison Ford, Kate Capshaw, Ke Huy Quan. Grand, rousing adventure, the serial kind. (PG) (2 hrs.) HBO, Tu 1:30 P.M. (CC)

J

JOHNNY EAGER (1942). Robert Taylor, Lana Turner, Van Heflin, Edward Arnold. Fair melodrama of student turned gangster. Heflin's best work and supporting Oscar. (1 hr. 55 mins.) SHO, Wed 11:30 A.M.

★ JUDGMENT AT NUREMBERG (1961). Spencer Tracy, Maximilian Schell, Burt Lancaster, Marlene Dietrich, Montgomery Clift, Judy Garland. The Nazi trials. Strong and sterling, all hands. (3 hrs. 5 mins.) SHO, Thu 11:25 A.M.

K

KANSAS (1988). Matt Dillon, Andrew McCarthy. Two Midwest teen-agers, improbable suspense plot. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sat 5 P.M./ TBS, Fri 10:35 P.M.

★ KID MILLIONS (1934). Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman, Ann Sothern, George Murphy. Freshest, most tuneful of the Cantor capers, and Ethel is plain yummy. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Fri 11 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 4:30 A.M.

KNIGHT RIDER 2000 (1991). David Hasselhoff, Susan Norman. The TV-series hero vs. gunrunners. (2 hrs.) USA, Sat 8 P.M.

L

● LABOR OF LOVE: THE ARLETTE SCHWEITZER STORY (1993). Ann Jillian, Tracey Gold. A woman makes medical history when she bears her daughter's twins after in-vitro fertilization. (2 hrs.) Ch. 2, Sun 9 P.M.

★ LADY L (1965). Sophia Loren, Paul Newman, David Niven, Claude Dauphin. Picaresque tale, lavishly set in bygone London-Paris. Not the book but still clever, often charming. (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Wed 12:30 P.M.

LASSITER (1984). Tom Selleck, Jane Seymour. A jewel thief. Sleek, ornate and standard. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 7, Sat 11:30 P.M.

THE LAST BOY SCOUT (1991). Bruce Willis, Damon Wayans. Supposed homage to tough-guy fictional sleuths. Plays more like retread of "Lethal Weapons." No dice. (R) (2 hrs.) HBO, Fri 8 P.M. (CC)

★ THE LAST EMPEROR (1987). John Lone, Joan Chen, Peter O'Toole. Works best as elegant, often spectacular travel brochure on modern Chinese history. Extraordinary life of commonplace man. (PG-13) (2¾ hrs.) HBO, Wed 3:15 P.M. (CC)

THE LAWNMOWER MAN (1992). Jeff Fahey, Pierce Brosnan, Jenny Wright. Sci-fi melodrama, via Stephen King, about retarded gardner turned into megalomaniac. Much video-game-like special effects. (R) (2 hrs.) TMC, Sun 11 A.M., Sun/EarlyMon 3:05 A.M.

★ LAWRENCE OF ARABIA (1962). Peter O'Toole, Alec Guinness, Omar Sharif, Jack Hawkins, Anthony Quinn. Riveting portrait in a magnificent desert mural, the David Lean way. (PG) (3 hrs. 45 mins.) MAX, Thu 12:30 P.M. (CC)

★ LEAVE 'EM LAUGHING (1981). Mickey Rooney, Anne Jackson. True drama of circus clown and wife who shelter homeless children. Very moving. Fine Rooney. (2 hrs.) LIFE, Thu 10 A.M.

LEGS (1983). Gwen Verdon, John Heard, Sheree North. Less than inspired drama of "I Want to be a Rockette." But able cast. (2 hrs.) Ch. 7, Sun 11:30 P.M.

● LETHAL WEAPON 2 (1989). Mel Gibson, Danny Glover. Those cop-sleuth partners. Same fierce formula, though not as fresh, fast or witty. (R) (2½ hrs.) Ch. 2, Fri 8:30 P.M. (CC)

LETHAL WEAPON 3 (1992). Mel Gibson, Danny Glover, Rene Russo, Stuart Wilson. Goes nowhere except in circles but at top speed. For addicts. (R) (2 hrs.) HBO. Sun 10 P.M., Sun/EarlyMon 4:30 A.M., Fri 10 P.M.

★ LICENSE TO DRIVE (1988). Corey Haim, Corey Feldman, Carol Kane, Richard Masur. Formula but pleasant teen comedy, engaging cast. (PG-13) (1½ hrs.) SHO, Tu 1 P.M., Sat 8 A.M., 4:30 P.M. (CC)

★ LIEBESTRAUM (1991). Kevin Anderson, Pamela Gidley, Bill Pullman. Coils of 40-year-old murder. Voluptuous blend of danger and steam, way-out windup. Smoldering and magnetic. (R) (1 hr. 50 mins.) SHO, Wed/EarlyThu 12:30 A.M. (CC)

★ LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON (1987). Dudley Moore, Kirk Cameron. Road-map plot about doctor and teen-ager exchanging minds. Cluttered. But the stars' charm turns a potential dud into a sweetly engaging caper. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sun 3 P.M.

LIQUID DREAMS (1991). Richard Steinmetz, Candice Daly. Mix of sex, sci-fi and video. Atmospheric suspense but lurches wildly between surreal satire and soft-core. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Sat 10 P.M.

★ THE LITTLE GIRL WHO LIVES DOWN THE LANE (1977). Jodie Foster, Martin Sheen, Scott Jacoby, Alexis Smith. Really intriguing mystery, with a knockout plot. (PG) (2 hrs.) TBS, Thu 10:05 A.M.

★ LIVE AND LET DIE (1973). Roger Moore, Jane Seymour. A new James Bond, and no panther he. But enough color and zing, if no house afire. (PG) (2½ hrs.) TBS, Wed 8:05 P.M.

LONE STAR (1952). Clark Gable, Ava Gardner, Melvyn Douglas. Texas of yore. Three troupers marking time, gamely. (Color added) (2 hrs.) TNT, Sat 8 A.M.

LOVE CRIMES (1992). Sean Young, Patrick Bergin. Atlanta prosecutor traps sex offender posing as photographer. Exploitation thriller slopes off disappointingly. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Wed 11:30 P.M.

LOVE, MARY (1985). Kristy McNichol, Piper Laurie, Matt Clark. Fact-based drama of illiterate woman who became disabled mother. Familiar terrain but solid Kristy. (2 hrs.) LIFE, Mon 10 A.M.

M

MACHO CALLAHAN (1970). David Janssen, Jean Seberg, Lee J. Cobb. Civil War escapee's revenge. Rather offbeat premise but erratic treatment. (R) (2 hrs.) TNT, Sun 9 P.M.

★ THE MALTESE FALCON (1941). Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor, Sydney Greenstreet, Peter Lorre, Gladys George, Barton McLane, Elisha Cook Jr. Bird for all seasons. (2 hrs.) DIS, Mon 9 P.M. (CC)

THE MAN WITH THE GOLDEN GUN (1974). Roger Moore, Christopher Lee. James Bond, down New Orleans way. Okay but Moore is no powerhouse, likewise the picture. (PG) (2½ hrs.) TBS, Wed 10:35 P.M.

THE MATING SEASON (1951). Gene Tierney, John Lund, Thelma Ritter, Miriam Hopkins. Rather dank-toned drama of poor ma, climber son. Thelma, never better, should have won supporting Oscar. (2 hrs.) AMC, Sun 5 P.M., 11 P.M.

★ MAX DUGAN RETURNS (1983). Marsha Mason, Jason Robards, Donald Sutherland, Matthew Broderick. Remorseful father makes amends to teacher daughter. Disarming comedy-drama via Neil Simon. (PG) (1¾ hrs.) HBO, Mon 5:45 P.M., Fri 10:45 A.M.

MEET THE APPLEGATES (1990). Ed Begley Jr., Stockard Channing. Thin, fuzzy satire of ecology-minded bugs disquised as average family. Like a limp stretched Saturday Night Live sketch. Applesauce. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Tu 11:30 P.M.

★ MILDRED PIERCE (1945). Joan Crawford, Ann Blyth, Zachary Scott, Eve Arden. Tawdry, juicy stuff, via Cain novel, and Joan's Oscar. (2 hrs.) SHO, Sun 3 P.M., Fri 4:35 P.M.

★ MISSISSIPPI MASALA (1991). Denzel Washington, Sarita Choudhury. Love affair of black American and Indian immigrant in black-and-white milieu. Original, sweetly pungent comedy. Good, large cast. (R) (2 hrs.) MAX, Sun 11:45 P.M. (CC)

★ MISTRAL'S DAUGHTER (1984). Stacy Keach, Stefanie Powers, Lee Remick. Novelist Krantz's Paris painter and his women, and not bad. Effective backgrounds, story turns. Paging a younger Lancaster as Mistral. (4 hrs.) LIFE, Sat 4 P.M.

THE MORNING AFTER (1986). Jane Fonda, Jeff Bridges, Raul Julia. Alcoholic actress drawn into L.A. murder web. Smooth suspense but studied and juiceless. (R) (2 hrs.) TBS, Mon 10:05 A.M.

★ MOTHER'S DAY ON WALTONS MOUNTAIN (1982). Ralph Waite, Michael Learned. Series feature. (1 hr. 55 mins.) DIS, Sun 4:05 P.M., Sun/EarlyMon 3:30 A.M.

★ MOVING (1988). Richard Pryor, Beverly Todd, Randy Quaid, Dave Thomas. Jersey family shifts to Idaho. Formula frame but genial, occasionally funny indeed. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Thu 9:30 P.M. (CC)

MR. MOM (1983). Michael Keaton, Teri Garr. Pat domestic caper. No surprises. (PG) (2 hrs.) Ch. 5, Sun 3 P.M.

MURDEROUS VISION (1991). Bruce Boxleitner, Laura Johnson. Police sleuth and psychic link two cases: missing persons, surgical mutilation. (R) (2 hrs.) USA, Thu 9 P.M. (CC)

★ MY COUSIN VINNY (1992). Joe Pesci, Marisa Tomei, Fred Gwynne. Flashy new lawyer in unflashy Alabama town. Surprising, funny doings. (R) (2 hrs.) HBO, Sun/EarlyMon 12:30 A.M.

N

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VACATION (1983). Chevy Chase, Beverly D'Angelo, Christie Brinkley. Good-natured chaos. Nothing new here. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sun 8 P.M.

NEVADA SMITH (1966). Steve McQueen, Karl Malden. Fair western. (2¾ hrs.) TBS, Wed/EarlyThu 1:05 A.M./ TNT, Sun 11 P.M.

NEVADA SMITH (1975). Lorne Greene, Cliff Potts. Fairly holding western about old gunrunner and Indian escorting explosives across Utah. (1½ hrs.) TBS, Wed/EarlyThu 3:50 A.M.

NEVER SAY DIE (1939). Bob Hope, Andy Devine. Second-rate Hope. (1½ hrs.) AMC, Tu 9:30 P.M., Tu/EarlyWed 3 A.M., Wed 1 P.M.

NEWSIES (1992). Christian Bale, David Moscow. N.Y. newsboys in 1899 sing, dance, go on strike. Joyless, pointless serving. Live-action Disney strikeout. (PG) (2 hrs.) DIS, Mon 6 P.M., Mon/EarlyTu 3 A.M. (CC)

★ NIGHT GALLERY (1969). Joan Crawford, Barry Sullivan, Ossie Davis, Rod Serling. Three occult tales, and very good indeed. (2 hrs.) A&E, Sat 3 P.M., Sat/EarlySun 4 A.M.

1941 (1979). John Belushi, Toshiro Mifune. Churning comedy of Pearl Harbor aftermath. Some fun but overbaked, overlong. (PG) (2 hrs.) HBO, Sun 4:30 P.M.

NO MAN OF HER OWN (1950). Barbara Stanwyck, John Lund, Jane Cowl, Phyllis Thaxter. Typical Stanwyck suds but the lady's a pro. It almost works. (2 hrs.) AMC, Sun 2:30 P.M., Mon 10 A.M.

NO MAN'S LAND (1984). Stella Stevens, Donna Dixon. An Old West sheriff tracks outlaws with her three daughters from previous marriages. (1½ hrs.) Ch. 11, Tu/EarlyWed 2 A.M.

NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS (1958). Andy Griffith, Nick Adams, Myron McCormick, Murray Hamilton. Hail the conquering Army rube, the one long joke. Big hit on Broadway. (2½ hrs.) TBS, Fri 12:35 P.M.

★ NORMA RAE (1979). Sally Field, Beau Bridges, Ron Leibman, Pat Hingle. Spunky labor union organizer, Southern mill town. Tour-de-force for Sally, who won Oscar. (PG) (2 hrs.) DIS, Fri 9:30 P.M.

Paramount Pictures

Paul Newman and Dwight Schultz in "Fat Man and Little Boy": HBO, Thursday at 4:30 P.M.

NOT WITHOUT MY DAUGHTER (1991). Sally Field, Alfred Molina, Sheila Rosenthal. Far-fetched, flapping dud about mother love and freedom. Sally tries. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) SHO, Tu 5 P.M.

NUTS (1987). Barbra Streisand, Richard Dreyfuss. Amen. A shrill spouter, with Streisand tested for sanity and possible manslaughter. (R) (2 hrs.) HBO, Thu/EarlyFri 1:40 A.M. (CC)

O

★ OBSESSION (1976). Cliff Robertson, Genevieve Bujold, John Lithgow. De Palma's lush thriller-salute to Hitchcock. Effective though laboriously obtuse. "Vertigo" still leads. (PG) (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Sat 3:15 P.M.

ON A CLEAR DAY YOU CAN SEE FOREVER (1970). Barbra Streisand, Yves Montand. Seems thinner, more contrived each time. But that Lane-Lerner score always glows. (G) (2½ hrs.) AMC, Fri 7 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 12:30 A.M.

★ ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN (1941). Fredric March, Martha Scott, Frankie Thomas, Elisabeth Fraser. A minister and his family. Splendid, rounded, warm version of Hartzell Spence book. Highly recommended. (2 hrs.) SHO, Mon 9 A.M.

★ 101 DALMATIANS (1961). Marvelous animated tale from Disney. Treat for all ages. (G) (1½ hrs.) DIS, Fri 8 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 4 A.M. (CC)

1,000 PIECES OF GOLD (1990). Rosalind Chao, Chris Cooper. Old West saloonkeeper loves Chinese slave he wins in gold-rush poker game. (2 hrs.) Ch. 13, Sat 8 P.M. (CC)

★ ONE WAY PASSAGE (1932). William Powell, Kay Francis. Lovely, romantic old-timer about shipboard encounter of prisoner and doomed woman. Beautifully served. (1½ hrs.) TMC, Thu 7:30 A.M.

OSCAR (1991). Sylvester Stallone, Peter Riegert, Joey Travolta. Gangster goes respectable. Sly's genial sitcom debut. At least he's game, and the fun doesn't curdle. (PG) (1 hr. 55 mins.) TMC, Sat 3:05 P.M. (CC)

★ PENNY SERENADE (1941). Cary Grant, Irene Dunne, Edgar Buchanan. Marriage over the years, via George Stevens. Tasteful, well played. (2 hrs.) AMC, Sun 6 A.M.

★ THE POPE MUST DIE(T) (1991). Robbie Coltrane, Beverly D'Angelo. Portly priest named pontiff by mistake. Good- natured, often rollicking light British farce of Vatican intrigue. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Tu/EarlyWed 2:30 A.M.

★ POSSESSED (1947). Joan Crawford, Van Heflin, Raymond Massey, Geraldine Brooks. Fine, workmanlike Joan, as schizoid, in credible though dank melodrama. That music is from Schumann's "Carnaval." (1¾ hrs.) MAX, Wed 9 A.M.

★ THE PRINCE OF TIDES (1991). Nick Nolte, Barbra Streisand, Blythe Danner, Kate Nelligan. Troubled Southerner and Manhattan psychiatrist. Captivating improvement of Conroy novel, expertly piloted by Streisand. (R) (2½ hrs.) MAX, Fri/EarlySat 4 A.M. (CC)

PRINCES IN EXILE (1990). Zachary Ansley, Stacie Mistysyn. Canadian drama about teen-agers at a special camp for cancer patients. (PG) (2 hrs.) USA, Thu/EarlyFri 1 A.M. (CC)

PT 109 (1963). Cliff Robertson, Ty Hardin. Fairly standard war drama, with Cliff as young Jack Kennedy. (3 hrs.) FAM, Sat 9 P.M.

R

THE RACE FOR THE DOUBLE HELIX (1986). Jeff Goldblum, Tim Pigott-Smith. Quirky American whiz kid and analytical Briton try to crack technical secret and cop Nobel Prize. (1 hr.) A&E, Tu 7 A.M. (Part 1)

★ RACHEL RIVER (1987). Zeljko Ivanek, Pamela Reed, Viveca Lindfors. Murder tale set in small Minnesota town. Starts well but slopes off. (PG-13) (1½ hrs.) TMC, Thu 4:30 P.M.

★ THE RAIN PEOPLE (1969). Shirley Knight, James Caan, Robert Duvall, Marya Zimmet. Fed-up, pregnant Long Island housewife bolts home. Interesting premise and able cast, though uneven script. (R) (2 hrs.) BRV, Fri 8 P.M., Fri/EarlySat 1 A.M.

RANCHO DELUXE (1975). Jeff Bridges, Sam Waterston, Elizabeth Ashley. Smooth and often quite funny western parody. Breezy entertainment. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 5, Mon/EarlyTu 3 A.M.

★ RASHOMON (1951). Toshiro Mifune, Machito Kyo, Masayuki Mori. The Kurosawa thunderbolt that put Japan on the world movie map. Forever fabulous. (1½ hrs.) Ch. 13, Sat 10 P.M.

RAW DEAL (1986). Arnold Schwarzenegger, Kathryn Harrold. Former F.B.I. agent infiltrates Chicago crime family. Crunnnnch! Few surprises. (R) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Mon 8 P.M.

RED SONJA (1985). Brigitte Nielsen, Arnold Schwarzenegger. Brisk but formula fantasy-adventure, needing some light touches. Does have scenic sweep, striking sets. (PG-13) (2 hrs.) TBS, Sat/EarlySun 1:35 A.M.

★ RIDE A WILD PONY (1976). Michael Craig, John Meillon, Eva Griffith. Appealing family fare of poor farm boy and crippled rich girl in turn-of-century Australia. (G) (2 hrs.) Ch. 2, Sat/EarlySun 3 A.M.

★ RIDE THE HIGH COUNTRY (1962). Randolph Scott, Joel McCrea, Mariette Hartley. Grand, picaresque western surprise, via director Peckinpah. Last line caps picture like a bottletop. (1 hr. 35 mins.) TMC, Mon 3:30 P.M.

ROCKY II (1979). Sylvester Stallone, Talia Shire, Burgess Meredith. Second verse, same as the first. One is fresher. (PG) (2½ hrs.) Ch. 5, Sat/EarlySun 3 A.M.

ROCKY III (1982). Sylvester Stallone, Carl Weathers. Same as before and before. If you can't get enough. (PG) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Wed 8 P.M.

ROCKY IV (1985). Sylvester Stallone, Dolph Lundgren. This time he boxes a Soviet giant. Guess who wins. (PG) (2 hrs.) Ch. 11, Thu 8 P.M.

ROLLING THUNDER (1977). William Devane, Tommy Lee Jones. Returned Vietnam P.O.W. avenges slain family. Solid playing, good projection of small-town America but too much graphic violence. (R) (2 hrs.) TBS, Thu/EarlyFri 12:50 A.M.

ROUND TRIP TO HEAVEN (1992). Corey Feldman, Zach Galligan. Only to Palm Springs. One way. (R) (2 hrs.) SHO, Tu 9 P.M. (CC)

★ ROYAL WEDDING (1951). Fred Astaire, Jane Powell, Peter Lawford, Sarah Churchill. Delightful musical set in London, bright Lane-Lerner score. (2 hrs.) AMC, Mon 5 P.M., Mon/EarlyTu 4 A.M.

S

★ SABOTEUR (1942). Robert Cummings, Priscilla Lane, Norman Lloyd, Otto and Alma Kruger. Twisty, gripping cross-country chase and Hitchcock to the hilt. (PG) (2 hrs.) AMC, Thu 1 P.M.

THE SANDPIPER (1965). Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, Eva Marie Saint, Richard Webber. Adulterous drivel, spruced up like a Tiffany showcase. Big Sur is the beautiful novocaine. (2 hrs.) MAX, Thu 8:30 A.M.

SCANDAL SHEET (1985). Burt Lancaster, Pamela Reed, Robert Urich, Robert Hutton. Ruthless publisher targets Hollywood couple. About what you'd expect. (2 hrs.) Ch. 5, Tu/EarlyWed 3 A.M.

★ THE SCARLET EMPRESS (1934). Marlene Dietrich, Sam Jaffe, John Lodge, Louise Dresser. Catherine looks great. So does the picture. Dazzling, artistic eyeful. (2 hrs.) AMC, Wed 2:30 P.M., Thu 10:30 A.M.

SCENES FROM A MALL (1991). Bette Midler, Woody Allen. An upside-down, American-style "Scenes From a Marriage," via Mazursky. Shapeless, plus oil-and-water stars. (R) (1½ hrs.) SHO, Tu/EarlyWed 3:10 A.M. (CC)

SCORPIO (1973). Burt Lancaster, Alain Delon. Spies and counter. Smooth but slickly pretentious. Paging Hitchcock. (PG) (2 hrs.) MAX, Mon 4 P.M.

THE SEA SHALL NOT HAVE THEM (1954). Michael Redgrave, Dirk Bogarde, Nigel Patrick, Anthony Steel. Downed British bomber survivors. Okay but ever so familiar by now. (2 hrs.) A&E, Fri 9 A.M.

★ THE SECRET LIFE OF WALTER MITTY (1947). Danny Kaye, Virginia Mayo. A daydreaming honey, from Thurber story. Early, elegant Kaye. (2 hrs.) AMC, Sat 11 A.M., 8 P.M.

SECRET WEAPON (1990). Griffin Dunne, Karen Allen. Arms technician is marked a traitor after exposing Israel's nuclear-bomb industry in 1986. (2 hrs.) TNT, Mon/EarlyTu 3 A.M.

★ SEMI-TOUGH (1977). Burt Reynolds, Kris Kristofferson, Jill Clayburgh, Robert Preston. Two football pros. Ambling but wryly amusing, often punchy. (R) (1 hr. 50 mins.) MAX, Sat/EarlySun 2:30 A.M.

SEPTEMBER (1987). Denholm Elliott, Mia Farrow, Sam Wanamaker. Endless whining on a Vermont weekend, via Woody Allen. His first dud. Elaine Stritch comes off best here. (PG) (2 hrs.) LIFE, Wed 10 A.M.

● SEX, LOVE AND COLD HARD CASH (1993). JoBeth Williams, Anthony Denison. Call girl teams with ex-con to recover her stolen savings. (2 hrs.) USA, Wed 9 P.M. (CC)

★ SHADOW OF A DOUBT (1943). Teresa Wright, Joseph Cotten, Macdonald Carey, Henry Travers. A pure, untricky Hitchcock masterpiece. His favorite, he said. (PG) (2 hrs. 20 mins.) TNT, Sat 2:40 P.M.

★ SHALL WE DANCE (1937). Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers. No, no, they can't take them away... Ditto Gershwin. (2 hrs.) AMC, Mon noon, 11 P.M.

★ SHIRLEY VALENTINE (1989). Pauline Collins, Tom Conti. Liverpool housewife spilling all, via the stage. Expanded but not dimmed. Still rewarding, and a fine Pauline. (R) (1 hr. 55 mins.) MAX, Mon/EarlyTu 2:20 A.M. (CC)

★ SHOOT THE MOON (1982). Albert Finney, Diane Keaton, Karen Allen, Peter Weller. Tense, expert, though rather drab study of a dissolving marriage. (R) (2¼ hrs.) TMC, Tu 5:45 P.M.

★ SILENT NIGHT, LONELY NIGHT (1969). Lloyd Bridges, Shirley Jones. Sweet adultery, Christmas Eve. Touching, well played drama, from Anderson play. (2 hrs.) A&E, Tu 9 A.M.

SILHOUETTE (1990). Faye Dunaway, David Rasche, Talisa Soto. Architect stranded in Texas town witnesses a murder. (R) (2 hrs.) USA, Fri 11 P.M. (CC)

★ SILK STOCKINGS (1957). Fred Astaire, Cyd Charisse, Janis Paige, Peter Lorre. "Ninotchka" champagne turned Broadway cocktail to bright Cole Porter bubbles, minus the stage cardboard. Bravo Paige and Lorre! (2½ hrs.) TNT, Mon noon.

THE SINS OF DORIAN GRAY (1983). Belinda Bauer, Anthony Perkins. A woman this go-round. Picture's awful. Stick to Hurd Hatfield and young Angie Lansbury. (2 hrs.) Ch. 7, Fri/EarlySat 3 A.M.

SLAVES OF NEW YORK (1989). Bernadette Peters, Chris Sarandon, Mary Beth Hurt. The downtown avant-garde art orbit, via Janowitz stories. Plastic, gimmicky doings, little shape or substance. (R) (2 hrs. 20 mins.) SHO, Mon/EarlyTu 3:40 A.M.

SLEEPWALKERS (1992). Brian Krause, Madchen Amick. Mother and son fiends with nasty eating habits, the Stephen King kind. Gore a la carte, with exactly one witty line. (R) (1½ hrs.) MAX, Wed 10 P.M. (CC)

THE SLUGGER'S WIFE (1985). Michael O'Keefe, Rebecca DeMornay. Baseball star and rock singer. Neil Simon strikes out. (PG-13) (1 hr. 55 mins.) TMC, Mon 5:05 P.M.

★ SO PROUDLY WE HAIL! (1943). Claudette Colbert, Paulette Goddard, Veronica Lake, George Reeves. Nurses on Bataan. Some strong moments. (2½ hrs.) AMC, Wed 4:30 P.M., 11 P.M.

SOMEONE TO LOVE (1987). Henry Jaglom, Orson Welles, Andrea Marcovicci. Party for expounding showfolk and host's camera. Different but far from magnetic. Welles's signoff. (R) (2 hrs.) BRV, Mon 8 P.M., Mon/EarlyTu 1 A.M.

★ SPLENDOR IN THE GRASS (1961). Natalie Wood, Warren Beatty, Barbara Loden, Pat Hingle, Audrey Christie. Probing drama of youth at bay, via William Inge and Elia Kazan. Provocative doings. (2½ hrs.) A&E, Sat 8 P.M., midnight.

★ THE SPOILERS (1942). John Wayne, Marlene Dietrich, Randolph Scott, Anna Lee. The Yukon, burly and swirly. (2 hrs.) TNT, Sun/EarlyMon 2 A.M.

STAR TREK VI: THE UNDISCOVERED COUNTRY (1991). Willam Shatner, Leonard Nimoy. Hairpiece Heaven now, but the cast's enthusiasm grows more appealingly nutty with time. Addicts, enjoy. (PG) (2 hrs.) MAX, Sun 6 P.M., Thu 10:30 A.M. (CC)

STAR TREK: THE MOTION PICTURE (1979). William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. An extension, and none too enterprising. These features perked up later. (G) (3 hrs.) Ch. 11, Sat midnight.

STAR! (1968). Julie Andrews, Richard Crenna, Michael Craig. Dramatic-musical pastiche about career of Gertrude Lawrence. Some juicy numbers but uneven package. (G) (3 hrs.) AMC, Sat 5 P.M., midnight.

THE STONE KILLER (1973). Charles Bronson, Martin Balsam. Tough cop vs. the mob. Gory, gory. (R) (2 hrs.) TNT, Wed 11 P.M.

A STONING IN FULHAM COUNTY (1988). Ken Olin, Jill Eikenberry. Four teens tried for murder of Amish baby. (2 hrs.) LIFE, Tu 9 P.M.

STRAIGHT TALK (1992). Dolly Parton, James Woods. Hello, dominant Dolly, all but running the camera, as Chicago radio psychologist. Good, sporting cast in the background. Obvious romantic comedy. (PG) (1 hr. 35 mins.) SHO, Sun 8 P.M., Fri 9:55 A.M., 6:25 P.M. (CC)/ TMC, Thu 9 A.M., 10 P.M. (CC)

STRANGE INVADERS (1983). Paul LeMat, Nancy Allen. Tasteful but highly derivative monster movie. Intriguing plot. (PG) (1 hr. 35 mins.) TMC, Sun 7 A.M., 4:35 P.M., Sat 1:30 P.M.

VCR CODES

Numbers that follow the listings are for users of VCR Plus+, a hand-held controller for automatic taping. Availability information: 1-800-4321-VCR.

Codes in the Station Guide, at the right of names, are for first-time setup of VCR Plus+.

Display screen Shows date, time and channel of selected program.

Number keys

Tape indicator One hour of tape needed for each bar shown

Recording selector

To program the controller, use the numbered keys to enter the codes from the listings. Then use the recording selector to choose how often you want the show recorded — once only, once weekly, or Monday through Friday.

The VCR Plus+ must remain near both the VCR and the remote-controlled cable selector, if any.

Officials Seek to Widen Jury-Duty Lists

By JAY ROMANO

A RECENT survey by the Eagleton Institute of Politics shows that 63 percent of those summoned for jury duty in the state never actually serve. Included in that figure, some legal experts say, are many people who never respond to jury summonses.

What causes such numbers, experts say, are legal exemptions from jury duty, based on occupation, and lists that are inadequate to identify all potential jurors. In addition, thousands of residents simply disregard the summonses and are never pursued.

As a result, and in an effort to develop larger juror pools, the State Assembly is considering legislation that would eliminate all occupational exemptions from jury service and raise the fees paid to jurors. Meanwhile, court officials in some counties are threatening people who ignore their jury summonses with sanctions including fines and jail.

"We're losing more people than we should be losing," said Michael Garrahan, chief of the technical assistance unit of the Administrative Office of the Courts. "I think we're going to have to try a little harder."

Under current law, Mr. Garrahan said, jury panels in criminal and civil trials are chosen from juror pools made up of residents summoned by the Superior Court in the county in which they live. In New Jersey, jurors must be United States citizens without criminal records between 18 and 75 years old.

The names of prospective jurors, Mr. Garrahan said, are drawn from two statewide lists: one of registered voters and one of licensed drivers. He said those two lists were used because they provided court officials with the broadest compilation of names possible. "I guess the original intention would be to have everyone eligible for jury service," he said.

The two lists are merged into one by court officials in each county, who then draw names of potential jurors from the merged list.

But some officials say that doesn't insure that everyone eligible for jury service will be on the list.

Ignoring a summons may result in a fine.

"I know people who neither vote nor drive," said Lois Powers, jury manager for Gloucester County. "That lets out a lot of people."

Ms. Powers, and other jury managers interviewed, say it is impossible to estimate the number of eligible residents who are not summoned because their names do not appear on either of the two lists.

But that, Ms. Powers said, is only part of the problem. In many cases, she said, summoning prospective jurors is no guarantee that they will actually serve.

"We summon 300 jurors a day," she said. "And out of those 300 people we yield approximately 100 eligible jurors."

The 200 other people, she said, are excused for various reasons, the most common being statutory exemptions.

"A lot of people are exempt," Ms. Powers said, including police officers, fish and game wardens, hospital workers and people with minor children and no one else to care for them.

Legal exemptions reduce the juror pool by nearly two-thirds in some counties, but officials face another problem.

"I would say that word has gotten out that in New Jersey nothing is done if you don't show up for jury duty," Ms. Powers said.

In Gloucester County, she said, between 20 and 25 percent of those summoned and deemed eligible to serve fail to show up.

"Unfortunately, we're all understaffed," Ms. Powers said. "I would say that the solution would be that if they did not show up after two warnings, a warrant should be issued to appear before the assignment judge. But as yet, nothing of that nature has been done."

Martin L. Haines, a retired assignment judge from Burlington County, agreed that little is done about people who ignore jury summonses. Mr. Haines, who is now director of the Institute for Law and Justice Inc., a

Towns and State in Dispute on Trucks That Avoid Turnpike

William E. Sauro/The New York Times

Trucks rolling along Route 130 near its intersection with Half Acre Road in Cranbury, where Wendy McMichael of East Windsor died last year when her car was hit by a truck.

By JOHN BENDEL

WHEN Dale Smith, an independent trucker from Brunswick, Ga., wheels his big blue Freightliner through New Jersey, he stays away from the New Jersey Turnpike.

"I always use Route 130," he said at an East Windsor fuel stop recently. "I just won't pay those tolls on the turnpike."

Rutgers Express Inc., a trucking company based in East Brunswick, pays about $350 a day in turnpike tolls, said Bruce Arbeiter, the company president. But he said the turnpike would cost more than $500 a day if his 52 trucks used it as often as they once did.

"We've instructed all our drivers to avoid the turnpike whenever humanly possible," Mr. Arbeiter said.

Mr. Smith, Mr. Arbeiter and others who shun the turnpike are at the center of a growing controversy between some Central Jersey communities and state officials. Residents in these towns say many truckers divert to highways like Route 130 and Route 1, slowing traffic and causing accidents.

Responding to those complaints, the State Assembly has passed a resolution recommending volume toll discounts to lure truckers back to the turnpike. The nonbinding resolution passed the Assembly by a vote of 65 to 3 in late March.

Still, state officials say that Mr. Smith and Mr. Arbeiter are in a distinct minority, that most trucks on local highways are there on local business and that there is no significant diversion from the turnpike.

Concern is voiced about traffic delays and safety.

They say that thus there is no problem, and that a Transportation Department study released in March proves it. And the Governor's office says that volume discounts are illegal under the state's convenant with the Turnpike Authority.

But local officials cast doubt on the Transportation Department study and one done by the Turnpike Authority. "Baloney," said Jack Flood, Mayor of West Windsor, a Mercer County municipality on Route 1. "Our police have noticed the additional truck traffic. Everyone has."

Assemblywoman Harriet Derman, Republican of Metuchen, who sponsored the resolution, also disagrees with official reports.

"They say they have not seen an exodus, but you have to look at anecdotal evidence of what's happening," Mrs. Derman said. "When you drive on the Route 1 corridor and there's an 18-wheeler ahead of you and another ahead of that and then another, they add up."

Mrs. Derman's resolution asserts that a doubling of truck tolls two years ago is the cause of the problem. "This 100 percent increase in tolls," the resolution says, "has caused the trucking industry to promote and individual truckers to participate in a boycott of the New Jersey Turnpike."

Though truck diversion from the turnpike first became an issue after that March 1991 increase, it erupted anew in October 1992, when in a nine-day period heavy trucks were involved in three separate fatal accidents along Route 130. The 50-mile highway that parallels the turnpike between Camden and North Brunswick has since become the focus of concern over diverted heavy truck traffic.

Route 130 was called New Jersey 1 when it opened in 1919. The four-lane concrete highway with wide grass dividers reached across the gently rolling farmland of Middlesex, Mercer and Burlington Counties. It was renamed Route 130 in the 1930's.

The northern half of the highway was forsaken by all but local traffic when the New Jersey Turnpike opened in the early 50's. Gas stations and assorted roadside businesses lay abandoned and overgrown along Route 130 well into the 70's, when homes, shopping malls and warehouses spread across the area.

Rapid development may account for the long-term increase in Route 130 traffic of all kinds. According to the Department of Transportation, the vast majority of heavy trucks — at least 82 percent of those on Route 130 — are there to use local services or make deliveries. But that explanation doesn't satisfy residents and business operators along the highway.

Michael Lukowitsky, who owns a gift and card shop in a Route 130 mall, can see the highway from his store window.

"Truck traffic increased since they raised tolls on the turnpike," Mr.

When It's Spring, It's Time For Nonpartisan Elections

By ELISABETH GINSBURG

ON Tuesday, voters in Hackensack will elect a five-member City Council, choosing among candidates presented as two opposing slates, each headed by a Council incumbent.

One slate is led by John Zisa, a Republican who has been serving as the city's Mayor, a designation bestowed by the Council on one of its members. The Deputy Mayor, Sandra Robinson, a Democrat, has broken with Mr. Zisa and is running for the Council with her own group of candidates.

Each slate includes both Republicans and Democrats, though no party affiliations will be listed on the ballot. Such coalitions are possible because Hackensack is what the New Jersey State League of Municipalities calls a "nonpartisan municipality."

The chief of the league's bureau of municipal information, Albert J. Wolfe, said residents had chosen the nonpartisan system in 87 of the state's 567 municipalities, ranging in size from cities like Newark to small towns like Sparta. Most of them hold municipal votes in the spring, rather than on Election Day in November, when state and Federal offices are filled. Mr. Wolfe said that separating the voting eliminated the "coattail effect," when those running for higher office could help carry local candidates to victory.

In theory, these communities have banished traditional party politics from the local electoral process. The reality, Mr. Wolfe said, is that partisan politics flourish in these towns, although factions may not split along Republican and Democratic lines. In many cases, however, competing "shadow organizations" of Democrats, Republicans and independents back opposing candidates or slates of candidates, Mr. Wolfe said.

Since 1987, four of the state's nonpartisan towns have reverted to partisan status. In at least one of the four municipalities, Belmar, the local Democratic Party organization worked for the return to traditional politics. The Monmouth County Democratic chairman, Victor Scudieri, said his party had also circulated petitions in nonpartisan towns like Ocean Township and Tinton Falls in an attempt to foster the charter changes that would end their nonpartisan systems.

"Most nonpartisan towns have a Democratic majority," said Mr. Scudieri, who added that he thought party politics provided better representative government and acted as a deterrent to political machines.

In theory, a ban on traditional party politics; in reality, not necessarily so.

In Hackensack, Charles Sciarra, the campaign manager for Ms. Robinson and her running mates, said that no political party had provided money or other assistance to either slate of Council candidates. Most municipal elections "come down to management, not ideology," Mr. Sciarra said.

Ms. Robinson and Mr. Zisa ran together for the Council four years ago, but once in office they have disagreed on most municipal issues, Mr. Sciarra said. One of Ms. Robinson's current running mates, Emil Canestrino, a retired city police captain, is a Republican.

To further muddy the political waters, Ms. Robinson, who made an unsuccessful bid for the Bergen County Board of Freeholders in 1991 as a Democrat, backed a Republican candidate for the State Senate in 1992.

This move "irritated the party organization," said the executive director of the Bergen County Democratic Party, Donna Spotto, making it unlikely that Ms. Robinson would receive help from the Democrats, even if it were offered.

As is often the case in nonpartisan towns, the Robinson and Zisa slates are divided on local issues ranging from Police Department promotion policy to whether the city manager should be required to live in Hackensack.

The Robinson group has also accused Mr. Zisa's organization of violating campaign-finance regulations through the use of money raised at testimonial dinners, a charge that was denied. Even without Democratic and Republican Party lines on the ballot, the level of squabbling is high.

It is perhaps paradoxical that corruption allegations should be made in a city whose political system is a byproduct of an era of reform in American politics. Dr. Ray Bodner, professor emeritus of political science at Rutgers, said the reform movement that appeared on the national scene about 1900 was a response to rampant political corruption.

Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson were among those who sought ways to make the electoral process more open and honest. Nonpartisan

After Fires, Neighbors Seek to 'Pull Together'

By ALBERT J. PARISI

JERSEY CITY

THE effect of the four-alarm blaze that swept through the Bergen Hill historic district here early last month wasn't limited to the damage to eight Victorian row houses. Residents say the fire left a legacy beyond charred wooden beams, broken windows boarded over with cheap plywood and roofs mangled as if from the bite of a giant predator.

The fierce blaze, they say, also damaged a sense of confidence and security they had gained over the years. On Astor Place, the brick houses had been a monument to bygone days when drugs were sold only from pharmacies and the sound of sirens accompanied horse-drawn fire wagons, not the police.

"People around here have worked long and hard for what they have and beyond the financial investment in this area, what we have is pride," said Dennis G. Doran, a real-estate manager and treasurer of the Bergen Hill Neighborhood Association. "Something like this is a setback for us, but sometimes out of the ashes, greater things arise."

A Renewal of Respect

"This crisis has motivated people to pull together," said Mary McLean Bateman, president of the Astor Place Block Association. "A tragedy like this, it renews the respect we have for our own homes and those who live here. The problem is that some surrounding this area don't have the same kind of respect for what we own and have worked so long and hard for."

Early on April 6, fire broke out in a vacant building at 25 Astor Place and quickly spread to an adjoining vacant building. Before the fire was put out by 20 fire units from Jersey City and elsewhere, eight buildings were damaged, five severely. Forty residents were evacuated, and nine families were given temporary shelter by the Hudson County chapter of the American Red Cross, said Joseph P. Lecowitch, the chapter's director.

The cause of the blaze is still under investigation, but residents suspect arson, since one of the two vacant buildings had burned the week before. Even though damage was limited at the time, for some residents the incident served as a harbinger.

Residents Join Cleanup

On April 24, both neighborhood associations sponsored a blockwide cleanup of the area in which several dozen residents loaded fire debris into a rented trash container for hauling. Children played in the street, which was blocked off to traffic, while parents sought to repair the scars of fire damage.

The neighborhood groups, which also sponsored picnics and flea markets to raise clean-up money, ended the day with a potluck dinner and a forum open to City Council candidates. They also boarded up the damaged buildings against looting.

"As we're working, we noticed a couple of burglars exiting the rear of one damaged building with TV sets in their arms," Mr. Doran said with a shake of his head. "Mary Bateman wound up chasing after them, following them home and calling the police. Amazing!"

Recalling the incident, Ms. Bateman said, "We just want people to have a little respect and mercy for what we're trying to do here."

Neighborhood Block Watches

Both neighborhood groups, which have 50 active members, also conduct neighborhood block watches.

"Someone sees something out of place, someone suspicious, it's our responsibility to call the police," Mr. Doran said. "We look out for our own interests because what affects one in this neighborhood, well, it affects us all."

Mr. Doran and other residents said the vacant buildings had long been a source of trouble.

Dealers have sold drugs from the buildings' entranceways. Police patrols scattered the drug traffic only temporarily, residents said, and when the sun set, the dealers returned.

"Just over a year ago, the problem got so bad that we needed to take some kind of action," Mr. Doran said. "A little light on the subject we felt couldn't hurt."

The Bergen Hill Association contracted with the Public Service Electric and Gas Company and installed a spotlight across the street that illuminated the two vacant buildings. It cost $20.40 a month, but "it was money well spent," Mr. Doran said, and the drug dealers moved on.

But they didn't move very far: nearby vacant buildings drew addicts and transients and accounted for an increase in burglaries and break-ins along the tree-lined streets in the shadow of the Jersey City Medical Center.

'I'm Going to Rebuild'

But residents say the fire and its aftermath have brought many closer together in an effort to rebuild the neighborhood and their sense of security.

"My plans?" Russell L. Franklin said. "I'm going to rebuild, and while it's not going to be easy, it's something that I have to do." Mr. Franklin is a data-processing consultant who, in addition to his home, owns an adjacent building on Astor Place that was severely damaged by the fire. He said the building, a rental property with two apartments, was inherited from an uncle, who purchased it in the 1980's.

"He put a lot of work into that building, a whole lot of work with his own hands, and for that alone I don't want to see it go to waste," he said, estimating the damage at more than $100,000.

Some residents forced out by the blaze have returned because, they say, they have nowhere to go. Others, like Kathryn E. Landrigan, a Jersey City native and assistant controller for a women's-wear company, say that adversity brought on by the blaze can be overcome if one is resilient.

"Well, let's see," Ms. Landrigan said. "We don't have any electricity, the back of our house is burned and there's lots of smoke and water damage, but we'll get through this. It's nothing that can't be repaired." On the positive side, she said, there is still running water, and neighbors have been generous with help.

"In lots of ways, it's kind of like we've been camping out," Ms. Landrigan said. "My boyfriend and I have been showering by flashlight. It's kind of romantic, I suppose, but I want things back to normal."

While most residents have fire insurance, the cost of rebuilding the structures may exceed insurance outlays. In the case of the vacant building where the fire began — its owner, neighbors say, has not been heard from in years — rebuilding is an anxious question. Residents and neighborhood association officials hope that city funds earmarked for historic district preservation will be released for reconstruction, but applications, eligibility, hearings and red tape, they say, do not make for quick and easy solutions.

Earl Morgan, an Astor Place homeowner and columnist for The Jersey Journal, who lives down the street from the site of the fire, said that no matter what, the neighborhood would survive, because unlike other communities, the residents have roots they have chosen not to ignore.

'A Sense of Stability'

"This block is different because there is a sense of stability here," said Mr. Morgan, who bought his row house some 12 years ago and who grew up around the block. "People know people here. They've spent their entire lives here. There's something to be said for that."

Mr. Doran says that neighbors working together in the Bergen Hill district have been its salvation, that pride in its history and accomplishments has its own kind of legacy.

The area, he said, was developed in the early 1880's, when Bernard Vetterlein, a wealthy cigar importer, died and his large estate was divided among heirs and sold off. Developers built 125 row houses on land bordering Summit Avenue and Astor Place to meet the needs of the factory workers who made up a majority of the city's population. In the 1960's and 70's, a failing regional economy forced the sale of some buildings to landlords who divided once grand dwellings into squalid illegal apartments.

'Things Turned Around'

"Things turned around in the 1980's because people reinvested in the neighborhood and its history," Mr. Doran said. His own three-story row house, which he bought and renovated nearly 10 years ago, had at one time been divided into a dozen crude units.

For Angel E. Sanchez, who has rented an apartment on Astor Place for the last two years, the devastation across the street does not compare to other places he has known.

"What happened here we can come back from, because people have the will in their hearts to bring it back," Mr. Sanchez said. "Here they have taken a stand, and in other places where I have lived, like the South Bronx when people lose pride, their neighborhoods are gone forever." ■

New Jersey Q & A: Eddie Pabon

Reformed Car Thief Talks of His Life

By JOSEPH DEITCH

NEWARK

ALL that Eddie Pabon needed to steal a car was 13 or 14 seconds and a screwdriver. He sometimes stole seven or eight a day — more than 2,500 of them, he says, between 1984, when he was 14, and 1992 — mostly in West New York.

Mr. Pabon steals cars no more; in fact, he is frequently called upon to talk to youth groups about the mistakes he has made. The way he wears his baseball cap, he says, is a clue to the way he feels. When warning youngsters about the perils of drugs and car theft, he wears the cap backward to fit in with his audiences.

For 10 months, Mr. Pabon, under court order, was one of the 170 residents of Integrity House, a drug rehabilitation center here, and he now has a job as an usher at a theater in Secaucus.

In a recent interview, he talked about his life and feelings.

Q. What is your background?

A. I was born in Puerto Rico and we came here when I was 8 months old and lived in West New York. My parents have been separated since I was 3. I lived with my mother, stepfather, little sister and my older brother before undergoing rehabilitation at Integrity House. My brother is in drug rehab at an Integrity House branch in Secaucus.

I went to P.S. 5 in West New York, and I made it to the ninth grade at Memorial High School and then quit. I went back and got expelled. I began using drugs at age 10, starting with marijuana and alcohol, and went on cocaine and pills and other drugs that increased my addiction.

Q. What was your home life like?

A. Home life? I basically grew up on the streets of West New York, a city of 38,000 people, 75 percent of whom are Hispanic. My family life wasn't all bad. But I needed to be accepted by friends when I was a little kid. So I turned to the streets. I was accepted in recognition of all the bad things I did.

Q. When did you steal your first car?

A. In 1984. It was a cold day and I was high on drugs and I didn't feel like walking home. I looked for a car with keys in it. I spotted one and I took it. It was a Mercury Cougar. But I crashed it and was caught after the police gave chase.

Stealing cars became another high for me. The excitement of it was overwhelming, like a drug in itself. Even to this day I can relive the joy at the wheel of a stolen car. As I walk past parked cars, I still look to see if the keys are in them.

Q. Did you ever own your own car?

A. The odd thing is that I once had my own car, but it wasn't good, psychologically, and I never used it much. It was safe, because if a cop asked me to pull over, I had all my papers in order. That was boring. I preferred going out hunting for, and stealing, cars. That was exciting.

Norman Y. Lono for The New York Times

Eddie Pabon, a former car thief who says he stole more than 2,500 cars between 1984, when he was 14, and 1992. He now has a job as an usher at a theater in Secaucus.

Correction

An article in some regional copies of this section last Sunday about Florence Greenberg, founder of a recording company that flourished in the early days of rock-and-roll, referred to the company incorrectly. It was Scepter Records.

'Stealing cars became another high for me.'

Q. I gather you were highly selective about the cars you stole.

A. Yes, I was. So much so that I would steal up to eight cars a day until I got one I really liked and could stick with for a time. Eventually, maybe a few hours later, I would get bored with it and start all over.

Q. What was your driving style?

A. Speed was everything — the faster, the more exciting. That's why I kept ditching one for another, sometimes doing that all day.

Q. Was stealing cars your own decision each time?

A. There was no peer pressure on me to steal cars. It was the other way around. I pressured kids to do it. See these scars? They're from an accident in a stolen car in New York. The cops started chasing me in a patrol car, and I ended up on a sidewalk at 139th Street and Broadway. It caused a big traffic jam and the police could hardly move, but they managed to get to 142d Street. What happened was that I crashed through the front door of a building. I almost severed my tongue and lost my life, but the hospital saved me.

Q. How many times were you arrested?

A. I have been incarcerated at least 20 times for car theft. I lucked out in that police car chase I just told you about. I've never been incarcerated for drugs, and that was my biggest problem. All my incarcerations were for car stealing.

Q. Were drugs tied in to your car stealing?

A. For me, there was a strong relation between my drug habit and car stealing. The thefts got me money for drugs by selling the cars, though the thrill of stealing could produce highs. It did that for me and other car thieves. I wasn't unusual in getting high from the act of stealing and driving a stolen car. A lot of guys also did it for the excitement. I did. It was like a drug. Doing "doughnuts" in a stolen car is like getting on a fast roller-coaster, except that the thief is in control. You twist and turn and spin over and over for the thrill, or you drive in circles, like a doughnut.

Q. How did you go about stealing cars?

A. All I needed was 13 or 14 seconds and a screwdriver. With it, I would pop a door lock, open the door, pop the ignition and drive off. Keys left in cars would make it easier. I've stolen cars with keys in them. And if the police tried to arrest or stop me, I would show them the keys and say I left my license home and give somebody else's name. All this would be before the car was reported stolen. So the cops would let me go. I also forced people out of cars in hijackings. But I never hurt anyone.

Q. Has there been a special person in your life who had a positive influence?

A. I got help and inspiration from my seventh-grade teacher. He was a big influence. But I didn't follow in his steps, though he was a very decent model.

Q. Ever run into him?

A. I sometimes do. He greets me with open arms — the same as he did in my bad life, when I was on the run.

Q. What has the drug rehabilitation program at Integrity House done for you?

A. I gained control of myself. I know who I am now. I learned to control my temper. I would never think of consequences; now I do. In the streets, I never thought. I acted on impulse.

Q. How do you feel about facing the world?

A. I do have some kind of fear because I never lived out there without getting high and without abusing substances. I never knew what life was like without getting high. But I'm learning.

Now that I'm closer to a responsible life, I find it scary. I don't want to end up doing what I used to do. I want to be a counselor or psychologist. I did a little work in construction and in other part-time jobs. I never kept them for long.

Q. Tell me about your work counseling youngsters.

A. I tell them, "Don't do what I did." They take my advice seriously. I relate to them on the street level — no bull. I use slang and other plain talk so they know just what it is I'm talking about. They, in turn, talk openly to me.

One group I talk with is in Newark's Turnkey Program, which brings kids out of themselves and makes them more receptive to guidance. I talk to them as a role model from my own experience and style. They know I was on the street myself and did a lot of stupid things.

Q. Do you talk about school?

A. I tell them I passed the G.E.D. a few days ago. That's the General Educational Development test for high school equivalency. That's role-model stuff for them.

Q. How can car theft be prevented?

A. Don't own a car.

Q. What was the happiest moment in your life?

A. When I realized I wasn't stealing cars or using drugs anymore. And when I could walk in my old neighborhood and, instead of worrying about the police arresting me, I could say, "How are you doing, officer?" ■

A Room in the Country Awaits a Fresh Air Fund Child's Visit

By LORI SODERLIND

YARDVILLE

BLUE and cozy, overlooking fenced acres of freshly cut grass, Bill and Chris Wichser's fourth bedroom sits empty most of the year. Meanwhile, in Brooklyn, 9-year-old Robin Spencer shares a bedroom with her mother.

This summer their worlds will meet, and a space the Wichsers have found little use for will become a second home to a visiting child. The Wichsers are one of thousands of families volunteering through the Fresh Air Fund Friendly Towns program, through which 7,200 New York City children will spend part of the summer exploring greener fields.

For the Wichsers, becoming a Fresh Air family was an opportunity to share their good fortune. Raising their children, Katie, 10, and Andrew, 8, in their new home, settled among central New Jersey's farms and country stores, may have made their own dream come true.

'Could Make a Difference'

"We figured we were really lucky with the things that we have, and maybe we could make a difference for someone," said Mrs. Wichser, 35, who teaches kindergarten. Mr. Wichser, 34, is a computer systems manager at Princeton University.

The Wichsers are now entering their fourth summer as a Fresh Air family, and they hope this will be their third summer with Robin as a guest.

Through its combined programs, the Fresh Air Fund will send more than 10,000 children from New York City to host homes outside the city this year. The majority spend time with families like the Wichsers in 13 states from Virginia to Maine and in Canada.

Laura Pedrick for The New York Times

Bill and Chris Wichser and their children, Katie and Andrew, have invited a 9-year-old Brooklyn girl for another visit as part of the Fresh Air Fund Friendly Towns program.

Of the more than 10,000 children, 7,200 will go to homes, 2,500 will attend summer camp in Fishkill, N.Y., and a year-round camping program serves more than 1,100 children.

Children age 6 through 12 stay with their host families for two weeks, but the fund continues working with teenagers as old as 18 if they are invited back. About 60 percent are invited back every year; many form strong ties with their Fresh Air families and arrange to stay longer, sometimes for the entire summer.

The children are from low-income families, most of them receiving public assistance. They are registered through one of 60 community service agencies. For these youngsters, the advantages to a summer in the country or the suburbs are clear: many of the children are not allowed outside at all in their city neighborhoods.

Robin tells of her experiences in being beaten up on the school bus, and of the temperamental fan that fails to cool her Brooklyn apartment in the hotter months. Her mother is attending school. Like many urban children, she tells the Wichsers, Robin is afraid of gunfire in her neighborhood.

The child is unlikely to hear shots here. From the Wichsers' front steps, the dominant sounds are birds and lawn mowers. The air smells of the flowering trees.

"Kids from the city, they really worry," Mrs. Wichser said. "Even when they play. It takes time to get over that, and maybe they don't ever, really."

Influencing a Life

Though two weeks is a long time for a young child to be away, the Wichsers are aware that it is a relatively short time to influence a life. Still, they believe that the program does more than give a child a pool to float in or an air-conditioned room at night.

"Hopefully, this experience gives the children a memory and something to strive for," Mrs. Wichser said. Participating helps broaden her own children, as well, exposing them to both urban issues and to racial ones. The Wichsers hope they are providing role models, but say that they would also like to see more black and Hispanic suburban families become involved with the fund.

Inner-city children get to experience suburban life.

"We work hard," Mrs. Wichser said. "We're always trying to say, 'You can have this too if you work hard. It doesn't matter if you're black or white.' We hope that sticks. We hope it's not something where they say, 'Well, that was fun then, but now this other thing is all my life can ever be.' "

This is the Wichsers' first year in their new home, and they have invited Robin to visit them again. But it seems that acting as Fresh Air parents has its own peculiar challenges, and over time Robin has got some ideas of her own about the program.

'She Really Likes Us'

"She really likes us, but Robin has a philosophy too," Mrs. Wichser said. "This is an opportunity for her to go to different states and see different places. If she keeps coming with us, she's going to keep seeing the same things."

Last year, she spent most of her time in the Wichsers' friends' pool, and the family visited the Poconos. But Robin's sister's Fresh Air family videotaped most of her stay and mailed the sister a copy. "They took her horseback riding," Mr. Wichser said.

"This year, in the new house, we told her she could have her own bedroom," Mrs. Wichser said. "We think this might be something special for her. We're really in the country now."

Host families participating in the Friendly Towns program include some single men and women and older couples with or without children of their own. Some families are hosts to more than one child. The cost of sending a child for a two-week stay with a family costs the fund $297. A stay at the camp is $816 a child.

Tax-deductible contributions may be sent to the Fresh Air Fund, 1040 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10018. Families who want to be hosts may call the fund at (800) 367-0003. For those who wish to volunteer for other duties, the number is (212) 221-0900. ■

New Center Specializes in Treating Children's Eye Injuries

By SANDRA FRIEDLAND

NEWARK

It does not take much to blind a child. A careless jab with a pencil, a high and inside pitch or even a forceful stream of water that hits an eye just so can cause vision loss, if the injury is not treated promptly and properly.

For brown-eyed Xiomara Camacho, 14 months old, the culprit was an irresistible pair of bright ceramic clowns that she managed to pull off a table one evening in April. When her mother tried to take them away, the toddler bolted. In an instant, she fell; one clown shattered beneath her, and a pottery fragment sliced through the cornea of her left eye.

After a frantic trip to a local emergency room, Xiomara's parents, who live in Jersey City, were referred to the new Pediatric Ocular Trauma Center at Children's Hospital of New Jersey, a division of the United Hospitals Medical Center here. Xiomara became one of the first cases at the center, which opened in March. It provides 24-hour emergency service to children with serious eye injuries, the leading cause of blindness in youngsters.

Children's Hospital officials say the new center is the only one of its kind in the state and one of a handful across the country that are geared solely to children's eye emergencies. From anesthesiologists to nurses, the entire staff of the center is trained to handle the special needs of young patients.

"Children are not miniature adults," said Dr. Anthony Caputo, director of the Children's Eye Care Center, which houses the trauma service. Not only do children's eyes respond differently to injuries than adults' eyes do, Dr. Caputo emphasized, but even the way a doctor approaches a child with an injured eye is vastly different.

"Examining a crying, fighting, thrashing child can be a challenge for the doctor and a frustrating time for the traumatized parent," he said. "Our training is not just in our hands but in the psychology of pediatric medicine as well."

Xiomara had the type of eye injury that makes even seasoned emergency personnel blanch: a deep, jagged cut with the fluid of the eye spilling out. To complicate matters, she had been given a bottle of milk at the first hospital. With her stomach full, she could not undergo surgery when she arrived at Children's Hospital at 2:30 A.M. Doctors did start intravenous antibiotics to ward off infection.

Care is geared to youngsters' particular needs.

At 7 the next morning, the delicate repair work began. Surgeons peered through a ceiling-mounted microscope that magnified Xiomara's eye 10 to 50 times, making her wound look like a gaping cavern.

"It was one of the most serious injuries I have seen in a child that young," said Dr. Joseph DeLuca, a pediatric eye trauma surgeon and the director of the new center. In his seven years of treating eye injuries, he said, he has seen everything from gunshot wounds to a fishing hook, with worm attached, embedded in an eye.

Like Assembling a Puzzle

"Xiomara's laceration was shaped like an irregular star," Dr. DeLuca said, adding that part of her pupil and her iris had slipped through the opening, and an inflammatory membrane had formed over the lens. "It was tough to close the wound, almost like finding pieces of a puzzle."

After more than four hours of surgery, Xiomara was taken to the surgical floor of Children's Hospital, where she could be watched carefully. By the next morning, she was opening her injured eye, and the pupil looked round and normal. Dr. DeLuca assured her anxious parents that she would see out of the eye, but said that the extent of her vision would depend on regular follow-up care.

After eye surgery, children require much closer monitoring than adults, in part because children's eyes respond with more inflammation, which can delay the healing, said Dr. Rudolph Wagner, a pediatric ophthalmologist at the trauma center.

"The signs of healing are also more difficult to see with children," Dr. Wagner said. "They're much harder to examine, and very young children can't tell you how the eye feels."

If the lens of the eye has been harmed, a cataract will form, either immediately or gradually over days or even weeks, cutting off the child's vision, he said.

"With children who are under 10, we have a much shorter window of time to remove the cataract," Dr. Wagner said. "If the eye is not used for four to six weeks, it can lose the ability to see well."

A. J. Sundstrom

Dr. Joseph DeLuca, a pediatric eye trauma surgeon and the director of the Pediatric Ocular Trauma Center at Children's Hospital of New Jersey, examining Domenico DiCesare, who injured an eye with a pair of scissors.

The Children's Eye Trauma Center opened in the wake of a statewide campaign to improve emergency medical services for children. That effort culminated in the passage last fall of a law that created the Office of Pediatric Emergency Medicine in the State Health Department.

Dr. Richard Flyer, a pediatrician from Verona who led the fight for the legislation, lauded the intent of the new eye center. "I can only hope that it will become part of a bigger picture, a coordinated systems approach to all the needs of critically ill and injured children," he said.

The trauma center brings together a range of services that had been provided in a less coordinated way by individual doctors at the Children's Eye Center. A trauma team has been assembled, including Drs. Caputo, DeLuca and Wagner and two other pediatric ophthalmologists.

Ophthalmology residents from the New Jersey Medical School in Newark, a division of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey, also work at the center, as do ophthalmologists with fellowships in children's eye problems. Other specialists are also on call, including ocular plastic surgeons, who can repair a torn eyelid, and experts in problems of the cornea and retina.

Examining rooms at the center are specially equipped for children. To attract their attention, so a doctor can look at their eyes, there are videotapes of Barney, the popular television dinosaur, and musical toys.

There also are two operating rooms for children's eye surgery. "We have the ability to put on a case within minutes," Dr. Wagner said.

The center maintains a round-the-clock phone line that can be reached by dialing (800) 543-7393, or (800) KIDSEYE. And center officials have begun to tell rescue squads, pediatricians and hospital emergency-room personnel around the state about the service, so they can refer children to the center without delay.

'A Big Difference'

"The first minutes through the first hour can make a big difference in how difficult it is to treat an eye injury," Dr. Caputo said. He noted that if all the contents of the eye leak out, a child will be blind.

Linda DiCesare of Kenilworth spent hours in a local emergency room with her 4-year-old son, Domenico, after he slit his eye, from top to bottom, with a pair of round-tipped children's scissors. "We were waiting for an eye doctor who never came," Mrs. DiCesare recalled. "My son couldn't see and was in terrible pain the whole time."

Finally an intern called an ambulance to take Domenico to United Hospitals. Dr. DeLuca repaired the cut, which ran nearly the length of the boy's eyeball. In the 18 months since the accident, Dr. DeLuca has removed a cataract from the boy's eye and used a laser to clear a membrane from outer part of his lens.

Domenico was given a contact lens, "but he had trouble seeing with it," Mrs. DiCesare said. "Besides, how can you tell a 5-year-old to keep a contact in?"

Permanent Artificial Lens

Last August, Dr. DeLuca decided to implant a permanent artificial lens in Domenico's eye, similar to the ones used after cataract surgery on elderly patients. "Now he can see perfectly, even without glasses," the boy's mother said.

Five days after her injury, Xiomara went home wearing a cup-shaped pink plastic eye shield. Dr. DeLuca will check her eye every week for a month, then every other week. She may have to wear a series of eye patches over her good eye to strengthen and rehabilitate the injured one, he said, adding that her eye would look completely normal.

While Xiomara was in the hospital, her father, Gilberto Camacho, packed away every nonessential breakable item in the house. He also decided to lock his and his wife's bedroom door to protect their daughter from the corners of the furniture.

"When she got home, she headed straight for the toys in her room just like nothing had happened," Mr. Camacho said. "Thank God, she's fine." ■

Causes of Eye Injuries

Balls are the leading cause of children's eye injuries, followed by fists or fingers, sticks and falls, according to a review of 258 eye trauma cases at the United Hospitals Medical Centers in Newark. The injuries were serious enough to require hospitalization, and in all but four cases only one eye was harmed.

Researchers found that most of the accidents occurred between May and October, peaking in August. February had the least.

Four times more boys than girls suffered eye injuries, and in three-quarters of all the cases, another person was involved. Nearly a fourth of those injuries occurred in violent encounters like fights or muggings. In eight cases, child abuse was confirmed.

Children 5 years old and younger were the least likely to injure their eyes, while children between 11 and 15 suffered the most eye injuries. Three-quarters of the injuries from balls and fists, and 9 of every 10 injuries caused by metal objects, involved children over 10. Those objects most often were metal fragments that shot into the eye while children were using tools at home or in shop class.

Children younger than 10 suffered more than 80 percent of the injuries caused by falls, usually against furniture or other household items. Two-thirds of the injuries from animal bites occurred in children 5 or younger.

How can parents protect their children's eyes?

"Close supervision is the No. 1 thing, especially for younger children," said Carol O'Neill, program director at the New Jersey affiliate of the National Society to Prevent Blindness.

Mrs. O'Neill also stressed the need for protective eye gear in sports activities, particularly baseball. She recommended that batting helmets have guards that protect both the eyes and face.

Fact sheets on children's eye safety are available from the society, at 200 Centennial Avenue, Piscataway 08854. The phone number is (908) 844-2020.

Dispute Over Trucks That Avoid the Turnpike

Lukowitsky said. "At rush hour, the traffic backs up out here with trucks that should be on the turnpike."

Charles Moulton of Willingboro drives Route 130 three times a week to his job in East Windsor.

"I was told by a couple of truck drivers that it's much too expensive to take the turnpike," Mr. Moulton said as he stood behind the counter of the West Coast Video store where he works. "The trucks make 130 more congested, and to tell you the truth, they scare me."

Indeed, West Coast Video is not far from the intersection of Route 130 and Half Acre Road in Cranbury, where 26-year-old Wendy McMichael of East Windsor died when her car was hit by a 30-ton tractor-trailer in October 1992. She was one of three New Jerseyans who lost their lives on Route 130 that month.

Study After Public Outcry

In response to a public outcry after the Route 130 deaths, the Transportation Commissioner, Thomas M. Downs, ordered a study to establish whether heavy trucks were using the highway to elude turnpike tolls.

The results of the study, which involved videotapes of specific vehicles at various points on the highway, were released in March. "Route 130 in the New Brunswick to Bordentown corridor," the study concluded, "is not used by large trucks as a bypass of the New Jersey Turnpike."

The New York Times

That study followed a December 1992 Turnpike Authority report that said transit time and increased fuel consumption make alternate routes to the turnpike more expensive. Most trucks traveling Route 130 and Route 1, the report concluded, "are not there for the sole purpose of avoiding turnpike tolls."

Sam Cunninghame, executive director of the New Jersey Motor Truck Association, said both reports were inaccurate. Trucks avoiding the turnpike were on Route 130 even as the Transportation Department study was being conducted, he said, but not at the same times that surveyors were. "Many trucks are there at night and during the early morning hours," he said.

Mr. Cunninghame criticized the turnpike study for using hourly drivers' pay rates in calculations to show that the turnpike is cost-effective for truckers.

"The large majority of truck drivers are actually paid by the mile, by a percentage of revenue or by the trip," Mr. Cunninghame said. "So the study is flawed."

'A Good Reaction'

He had been vocal in opposition to the original 1991 toll increase and promoted the idea of an organized reaction among his own members and other state trucking associations. But the turnpike raised tolls despite protest. It now costs $18.20 to drive a typical 18-wheeler from the Delaware Memorial Bridge to the George Washington Bridge, from one end of the turnpike to the other — a round-trip cost of $36.80.

The increase angered Mr. Cunninghame. "I notified every counterpart of mine in every state east of the Mississippi," he said. Mr. Cunninghame said he got "a good reaction," though he would not use the word boycott.

"We're not telling them to stay off the turnpike," he said, "just to explore other routes."

When tolls rose on March 17, 1991, truck traffic on the turnpike fell, though the extent of the decline is still disputed.

"We noticed a slight decrease in traffic after tolls were increased," said Lynn Fleeger, a turnpike spokeswoman. But truckers quickly returned to the turnpike, Ms. Fleeger added, and more recently, turnpike truck traffic has been on the increase.

The Department of Transportation said that up to 1,000 trucks a day left the turnpike to ride Route 130, but only for a while. The diversion may have been short-lived, but political reaction has been building slowly.

Authorizing Police Inspections

Besides action in the Assembly, the Senate has been considering a measure, which some say is related to the turnpike diversion issue, that seeks to authorize truck-safety inspections by local police officers. Barring such authority, the local police can stop trucks only for probable cause.

The bill's sponsor, Senator Jack G. Sinagra, Republican of East Brunswick, said his measure addressed only the issue of truck safety. Mr. Cunninghame says it isn't that simple.

William E. Sauro/The New York Times

Truck waiting to enter traffic on Route 1. Residents of towns along the road say many truckers divert from the turnpike to Route 1 and Route 130, slowing traffic.

"Truck inspections are a separate issue," Mr. Cunninghame said, "but there is a cause-and-effect relationship here."

He said the police along local routes wanted the authority to inspect trucks that they believed should have been on the turnpike. Some of those inspections, he said, are done without the requisite probable cause to prod truckers back to the toll road.

Deputy Chief George Magyar of the North Brunswick Police Department denied that the police there harassed truckers or stopped trucks without probable cause. The issue, he said, is safety.

"It usually isn't hard to find probable cause," he said. "There are many trucks on the road with very obvious violations."

Seeking Turnpike 'Creativity'

As the debate over truck inspections goes on, the Turnpike Authority has taken notice of legislative concern. Turnpike officials said that volume discounts have been discussed with the office of Gov. Jim Florio. But Jon Shure, the Governor's spokesman, said discounts for trucks were not legally possible under the turnpike's covenant.

Assemblywoman Derman is not satisfied with that response. "We're looking for some creativity here on the part of the turnpike," she said.

The turnpike has reached out to Mr. Cunninghame and his association, but little has come of the contact. "The truckers wanted us to roll back tolls to pre-1991 levels," Ms. Fleeger said, "and that we cannot do."

Mr. Cunninghame asserts, however, that strained relations between the toll road and trucking industry would be eased by adoption of volume discounts.

"We believe the turnpike commissioners have the authority to modify the covenant so they could offer discounts," Mr. Cunninghame said.

The Transportation Department said a follow-up truck survey would be conducted along Route 130 in June.

Even if that report does resolve specific points of contention, however, the larger issue of big trucks' avoiding turnpike tolls will probably intensify. The turnpike estimates that another round of toll increases will be necessary by 1995. ■

"I was looking for fine, apartment-style living where I could entertain my old friends. And my new friends."

I found it at The Cupola Senior Residence.

"Companionship and security. Those are the reasons I chose to live at The Cupola Senior Residence. Here I have the independence I treasure so much without the concerns that come with living alone. Concerns like transportation, taking care of a home, meal preparation or making arrangements for medical appointments.

There is always scheduled transportation available to theaters, restaurants, or shopping, as well as someone to share the fun with. My new friends at The Cupola made me feel so at home.

My old friends and family enjoy visiting here. It's such a lovely residence, both inside and out. I have the luxury and comfort of a beautiful suite complete with private bath and kitchenette.

My family feels secure knowing there is round-the-clock health care available, should I ever require it. I know I made the right decision moving to The Cupola."

NEW JERSEY GUIDE

BATTLESHIP TRIBUTE

History-making sea adventures will be recounted by men who served aboard the battleship New Jersey at a celebration of the 50th anniversary of her commissioning. The tribute to the ship, which earned 16 battle stars serving in World War II, Korea, Vietnam and other actions, will be held on Saturday afternoon at the Monmouth County Library in Manalapan.

Paul Stillwell, director of history at the United States Naval Institute in Annapolis and author of "Battleship New Jersey" and other books published by the institute, will speak on "The Mystique and Aura of the Dreadnought," as the class of ship is known.

Capt. Joseph Azzolina, U.S.N., retired, will recall his days with the New Jersey at Beirut, and Capt. Walter M. Migrala Jr., commanding officer of the Naval Weapons Station at Earle, will report on her role in Vietnam.

The Battleship New Jersey Historical Museum Society will sponsor the free program. The society's executive vice president, Leon Morrison, will set the stage for the other speakers by presenting a historical overview of the battleship, which now sits decommissioned in Bremerton, Wash. The purpose of the society is to make the New Jersey a museum in her namesake state.

The afternoon will also feature an exhibition including models of the ship, photographs and memorabilia and a large-screen videotape tour of the ship, introduced by Capt. John C. Baker, who was commanding officer of the battleship's reserve detachment from 1985 to 1989.

The program will begin at 1 P.M. at the library, 125 Symmes Avenue, with an introduction by Walter E. Olkowski, president of the museum society. Naval cadets from Squadron One in Lakehurst will present the colors, and Gloria Patrizio, soprano, will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." A welcome and remarks by Freeholder Theodore J. Narozanick will follow.

At the conclusion of the program, Ms. Patrizio will lead the audience in singing "God Bless America" and "Anchors Aweigh."

Exhibits, including a nine-foot-long model of the New Jersey from the Intrepid Sea-Air Space Museum in New York City, will be displayed in the rotunda of the State House in Trenton from May 17 through May 20, and there will be a ceremonial observance in the Assembly about 12:30 P.M. on May 20.

DAYS OF OLD

The treadmill, familiar as an exercise contraption for people in this age, may be seen at Fosterfields in Morris Township today in its original form, as the horse-driven source of power for machinery in an earlier age.

From 1 to 3 P.M., the horse treadmill at the Morris County Park Commission's Living Historical Farm will be demonstrated for the first time since its restoration. The power generated depends on the horse's weight, visitors will hear in a commentary of facts and anecdotes.

Programs at the farm highlight skills and practices from the late 19th and early 20th centuries. From 1 to 4 P.M. Saturday, a volunteer carpenter, Ralph LeFevere, will be working on the reproduction of a chair that also serves as a step stool.

Next Sunday from 1 to 4 P.M., croquet players in period costume will discuss and illustrate the game and invite visitors to participate.

Fosterfields is on Kahdena Road off Route 24 west of Morristown. It is open from 10 a.m. to 5 P.M. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 P.M. Sunday. Admission is free except on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, when the fee is $2 for those 6 to 16 or over 65, free for those under 6 and $3 for others.

FLOWER SALE

Mother's Day gift baskets and a wide selection of annuals, perennials, shrubs and hanging baskets will be available at a sale at the Flat Rock Brook Nature Center in Englewood from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. today.

The sale is sponsored by the Garden Club of Englewood, which won an award of the Garden Club of America last spring to finance a "backyard habitat," a garden featuring native plants that are attractive to birds and butterflies and requiring little, if any, pesticide treatment.

Most Paints Have Latex Bases, but Alkyds Have Improved

By JOHN WARDE

Latex and oil paints use similar pigments but have different binders and thinner.

CHOOSING outdoor house paint has always been challenging, especially since air-pollution laws have become stricter. As a result, manufacturers are reformulating products, causing some, specifically oil- or alkyd-based varieties, to have different qualities.

Most paint today is latex based. The term refers to the chemicals in the binders, which make up the film that forms when the paint dries. The best latex-based paint contains 100 percent acrylic binders, which adhere more strongly than other types and also bond to a wider range of surfaces.

Next is paint with vinyl-acrylic binders, followed by paint with binders of vinyl terpolymer. In all latex paint, water is used as thinner to maintain the correct consistency for application. As the water evaporates, the paint dries.

Oil- and alkyd-based paints use as binders vegetable oil like linseed oil, or alkyd resins, which are synthetic. Because neither paint is dissolved by water, mineral spirits are used as thinner. For practical purposes, the terms "oil" and "alkyd" are interchangeable. Paint containing solely oil as a binder is virtually nonexistent. Most varieties contain just alkyds, or else a blend of the two.

Because of its water content and the composition of its binders, latex paint emits few of the hazardous fumes called volatile organic compounds that new pollution laws limit. As a result, most manufacturers have done little reformulating of latex paint.

High-quality latex paint continues to be a better choice than alkyd paint for painting house exteriors. Its assets include durability, ease of application and cleanup and faster drying time. Latex paint also resists bleaching and fading better, has less odor and has better resistance to mildew.

Alkyd paint, on the other hand, contains chemicals that emit volatile compounds, heretofore in large amounts. Conventional alkyd paint has traditionally been admired for its hardness, sheen and smooth application on rough surfaces.

Newer varieties, reformulated to comply with new regulations, are softer and less shiny. But they also tend to fade and chalk more readily as they age, because they contain fewer solvents and more solids, and their thickness makes them less easy to apply.

The newer alkyds are generally a better choice than latex on heavily chalked surfaces that do not respond to cleaning, on surfaces to which three or more coats of alkyd paint already adhere and when temperatures are below 60 degrees or above 85, the optimum conditions for applying latex. Because of their flexibility, the newer alkyds are less brittle and therefore less prone to cracking and peeling than the older variety. Newer alkyd paint also has less odor and is less of a fire hazard.

To estimate how much paint is needed measure the rectangular areas to be painted by multiplying their widths by their heights and measure the triangular areas by multiplying their heights by half their widths. Add the figures together and show your answer in square feet.

Next, measure the areas of any features that will not be painted. Add them together and subtract that sum from the total. Divide the answer by the spread rate on the paint-can label, which is the approximate number of square feet a gallon will cover. The result is the estimated number of gallons needed to apply one coat of paint to the area calculated.

The best results with latex and alkyd paint depend on proper surface preparation, and that may require applying primer and sealer. Primer promotes adhesion of new paint. Sealer keeps paint from being unevenly absorbed. Primer-sealers contain both ingredients.

Primer-sealer is usually not needed when repainting previously painted wood surfaces that are in good condition. But wash such surfaces free of dirt and chalked paint, preferably with a rented power washer, before repainting. Sand shiny areas lightly, so that the new paint will grip better.

Primer-sealer is required on painted wood surfaces in poor condition and to cover places where bare wood is exposed. It is also required on unpainted new wood. Latex or oil-based primer-sealer can be used under latex paint. Use oil-based primer-sealer beneath alkyd paint and for severely chalked surfaces that cannot be thoroughly cleaned. For wood that stains easily, notably cedar and redwood, use a water-based acrylic primer-sealer, regardless of the paint type. To cover individual stains like those from nails or knots use primer-sealer containing shellac.

Before repainting masonry, wash and scrub the surface thoroughly to remove loose particles. If that exposes masonry, apply masonry sealer or water-based acrylic primer-sealer. Otherwise, none is required. To prepare new masonry, apply either product.

Aluminum and vinyl siding can be painted with acrylic latex paint without using primer. Surfaces have to be thoroughly cleaned, and aluminum siding has to sanded. When selecting paint for aluminum siding, choose a flat variety, to avoid highlighting dents.

Never sand vinyl siding or scrub it with a wire brush, because that can damage the surface. Choose a color that is the same or lighter than the existing one. A darker color can allow siding to absorb too much heat, causing it to warp.

Galvanized metal like that of gutters and downspouts need not receive primer, either, unless rust is visible or extra protection from rusting is desired. In such cases, clean the metal by washing it and then wiping it with mineral spirits. Treat rust damage if there is any and apply two coats of a rust-inhibiting primer. ■

FOOD

By MOIRA HODGSON

HAMBURGERS and hot dogs were — and still are — the most popular items for the outdoor grill. But the old-style barbecue has undergone many changes since the fashion for it first swept the nation in the 1940's. The current status symbols are gas grills that cost half as much as a car, flavored wood chips, exotic marinades and fancy salsas. And as Americans look for food that is low in fat and calories, without preservatives, sugar or rich creamy sauces, so the search for new flavors and ingredients continues.

As noted last week, Oriental seasonings — soy sauce, sesame oil, fresh coriander — do a great job of enhancing the taste of grilled foods, especially seafood. I like to buy shrimp in Chinatown, where they are sold with their heads on, and soak them for a couple of hours in heavily salted ice water, which leaches out impurities. They are then patted dry and tossed in a mixture of peanut oil and black and red peppers with garlic. Cooking them in their shells concentrates their flavor — and the shells can also be eaten, if you like.

Whole red snapper (cleaned and scaled but with the head on) is good scored and marinated in a mixture of minced Oriental black beans, scallions, ginger and garlic before being grilled.

And tuna, which is at its best rare, is very good cut thick, grilled so that it has a crust but is still raw in the middle, and served with traditional Japanese garnishes. To make this dish, buy only the best and freshest tuna from a reputable fish store. The version below came about after I brought home some tuna from Citarella, on Broadway at 75th Street in Manhattan, that was so fresh I started to nibble at it raw. So instead of grilling it the usual way, I decided to make an Oriental-style dish, a "seared sushi."

When cooking the following dishes on an outdoor grill, have plenty of coals and light them about 35 to 40 minutes in advance. They should be red hot so that the fish cooks quickly. Rice and steamed or grilled vegetables go well with them.

Seared Tuna 'Sushi'

Total time: 45 minutes

2 tuna steaks, about 2 inches thick and 12 ounces each
3 tablespoons cracked black pepper
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons five-spice powder
Soy sauce
4 tablespoons thinly sliced ginger
4 tablespoons wasabi paste mixed with 4 tablespoons water.

1. Wipe steaks dry with paper towels. Mix pepper, salt and five- spice powder together and coat outside of tuna. Leave for about 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Sear the tuna over very hot coals for about two minutes on the top and on the bottom. Pass the sides over the coals for a minute. Cool the tuna and serve, passing the soy sauce, ginger and wasabi paste separately.

Yield: 4 servings.

Note: Wasabi paste is a Japanese green horseradish available in Asian food markets.

Grilled Red Snapper With Black Beans

Total time: 45 minutes

1 whole red snapper (about 2 pounds) cleaned, sealed, with head on
2 tablespoons minced Oriental black beans
1 clove garlic, minced
2 scallions, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, finely chopped
2 tablespoons peanut oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped coriander leaves
1 lemon, cut into quarters.

1. Score the fish twice on each side vertically. Combine the Oriental black beans, garlic, scallions, ginger, peanut oil, salt and pepper. Spread the mixture over the fish and inside the cavity. Let the fish marinate for at least 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Broil the fish for six to seven minutes on each side, or until done. To serve, sprinkle with coriander and garnish with lemon.

Yield: 2 to 3 servings.

Grilled Sesame Shrimp

Total time: 45 minutes

2 pounds large shrimp, shells on (heads, too, if possible)
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons freshly ground pepper 2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, minced
1 teaspoon red pepper flakes
2 tablespoons sesame oil.

1. Rinse the shrimp, pat them dry (leaving the shells on) and toss them in a mixture of salt, pepper, peanut oil, garlic, ginger and red pepper. Preheat grill or broiler.

2. Place the shrimp on an oiled rack and grill for two to three minutes on each side. Be careful not to overcook them. Remove them from the grill, place them in a bowl and toss them with sesame oil. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings. ■

GARDENING

Animals That Ignore the 'Keep Out' Signs

By JOAN LEE FAUST

IT was Jim Henson's popular puppet, Kermit the Frog, who sang "It's Not Easy Being Green."

Well, it's not easy being a black squirrel either, especially when the rest of the squirrel family is gray. The squirrels in the neighborhood are the usual furry gray, except for one. And for want of a more dynamic name, the neighbors have dubbed him Blackie.

This squirrel lives where there are ample tall shade trees, green lawns and flowering trees and shrubs, but its life has proved to be rather lonely. The gray squirrels chase him away. It has no other playmates and always seems to be by itself, although squirrel watchers know that black coats are often the norm in the litters of the Eastern gray squirrels.

There does not seem to be much sympathy for squirrels of any color among gardeners. These ubiquitous animals have a bad reputation of brash behavior. Their penchant for digging gets them into serious trouble. They use their paws with rapid speed to dig up everything: the newly planted tubs that sport brightly colored spring pansies, the first signs of spinach seedlings in the vegetable patch, the flowers of hardy bulbs, especially crocus, and in the fall, the bulbs themselves.

Squirrels even knock off the tops of tulips. They nibble a petal or two and then leave carcasses of the flowers to wilt. The daffodils and hyacinths remain untouched, thankfully.

Squirrels also dig holes, big ones, in flower borders. Again, their busy little paws whip away at the soil in that ceaseless search for buried nuts or whatever. If only squirrels had files, or even computers, to help them keep track of where they put what.

Squirrels are also talkers. They will scold incessantly from their high tree perches as warnings to the rest of the family. Then they chase one another up and down the tree trunks or "fly" from branch to branch with their tails unfurled like sails. Even though Blackie may be singled out for his distinctness, he is not innocent and has picked up the same bad habits. The destruction goes on.

Although deer have top billing in this regard, squirrels must surely come in second. Many gardeners have given up on certain spring flowering bulbs, especially crocus and tulips, because they know that the squirrels always seem to get to them first.

Bulb merchants, and some gardeners, too, have been praising one particular crocus species as being squirrel proof, or at least squirrel resistant. These claims are for the species Crocus tommasinianus, a native plant of northern Bulgaria with soft purple flowers. This particular crocus species reseeds itself generously and is considered ideal for planting in places where many flowers are needed. For some reason, the squirrels do not find this particular crocus to their liking.

There is yet another troublemaker in the garden. This one has long ears, a short buttonlike tale and a twitchy nose and is know as the Eastern cottontail. As cute as these rabbits may seem to be, they are voracious nibblers.

It is no small wonder that those who enjoy salads often refer to themselves as rabbits. These cottontails find succulent leaves are just about the tastiest fare around. Overnight, they can ruin a thriving vegetable garden. And it is not just lettuce that is threatened. The rabbit palate is especially drawn to the tiny new leaves of all vegetable seedlings including spinach, beets and chard. Even the new growth of some of the perennials is not immune as long as the new leaves are succulent and tasty.

Of course, there are other animal nuisances. There are the mice and voles that feed on roots and chipmunks that nest in walls and feed on various tasty morsels. And skunks are noted for digging up lawns while they search for grubs.

The best solutions are those that discourage the populations in the first place. Live trapping to take the animals elsewhere is a kind answer, but it doesn't always work because some soon find their way back home.

Another solution is a large dog that takes on a barking guardianship of the property. But this can take on unwanted dimensions. The appearance of rabies in the Northeast has made caution a prime consideration.

Red pepper flakes and chili powder sprinkled on the ground where favorite flowers and plants are growing works for a time to ward off nibblers. So do the many commercial repellents that can be sprayed on plants and soil to create an unpleasant odor. But all too soon, the animals wise up. There are all kinds of solutions and usually the best foils are those that are worked out individually. You are on your own. ■

Private School's Computer Network Is Changing Student Life

By PRISCILLA VAN TASSEL

HIGHTSTOWN

THIS week the Peddie School will dedicate an advanced computer network that has already changed academic life at the independent boarding school. Without leaving their dormitories, students are conducting research in the library, handing in essays and other assignments electronically and getting help from teachers after class.

Nonacademic life is different as well. Students are using electronic mail to communicate with other students and parents as far away as Hong Kong. They are also lining up prom dates through the system, finding it not only convenient but also a much less unpleasant proposition than face-to-face rejection.

"It is so forward looking and innovative that it's being viewed as a model nationwide," said Daniel Kahn, executive director of the 64-member New Jersey Association of Independent Schools.

While elaborate computer hookups are commonplace on some college campuses, few secondary schools have the resources for such technology.

Peddie's system was made possible through donations from two famous alumni. Walter H. Annenberg, the publisher, philanthropist and former Ambassador to Britain, contributed a $3.8 million high-tech library. Finn Caspersen, chairman of Peddie's board and chairman and chief executive officer of the Beneficial Corporation, paid for a $200,000 fiber optics system.

Mr. Annenberg gained national attention in 1983 when he gave $12 million to Peddie in what is still the largest single gift to an American secondary school.

The computer network is expected to alter the relationship between teacher and student at Peddie. School officials envision that teachers will not be so much the source of all information, but rather guides, helping students do exploration.

'Egalitarian Approach'

"It is a much more egalitarian approach," said David Brown, director of Peddie's library. "Everybody has the same access to knowledge, from the youngest student to the head of school."

For example, Timothy Corica, chairman of the mathematics department and director of academic computing, no longer lectures his students about how various classes of algebraic functions work. Rather, he tells them to use the computer system to discover their characteristics and report back to him.

"It's a tremendous shift from asking narrow questions to asking open-ended questions, from me doing the work and giving them the results to them actually doing the exploration themselves," he said.

The cooperative spirit engendered by the network may lead to an overhaul of Peddie's class schedule. A committee is considering interdisciplinary classes two to three hours long, in which the emphasis would be on research and long-term projects, rather than on learning specific information and then being tested on it.

The heart of the computer network is the new Walter H. Annenberg Library, which will be dedicated on Saturday. In addition to housing 30,000 volumes, the library has access to more than 27 million titles around the country. Students can request material from other libraries and receive it within a week. The library has a computerized reference system that retrieves different kinds of information rapidly.

The introduction of electronic mail sparked an interest among students about computers in general.

"Before E-mail a lot of kids didn't care about computers at all, but now everyone is into it," said Dennis Gregorovic, a sophomore. "Interest probably won't stay that high, but even if it doesn't, just the fact that it got people interested is a good thing."

Dietrich von Schwerdtner, director of computing services at Peddie, said that he had expected only about half of the faculty to use the new computer system consistently, but that nearly all teachers had found it to be helpful in one form or another.

"People we thought would not take to E-mail are using it every day," he said.

As elated as school officials are about the computer network, it has brought some problems with it. There are concerns about the security and confidentiality of the electronic mail system, under which students can read others' correspondence if they know the correct password. School officials recently debated whether they had the right to invade the privacy of students' E-mail communications. They decided they did not.

In a school at which 24 percent of students are on scholarship, there is some fear that the system will favor those who can afford their own computers, typically costing $2,000. There is also the question of how much tuition might rise, from current levels of $18,900 for boarding students and $12,900 for day students, if all students and faculty members are eventually expected to own their own computers.

For the three-quarters of students who currently do not have computers, there are 60 school-owned computers they may use.

Then there is the inescapable fact that Peddie's students, being teenagers, at times misuse the equipment. Last month, on the first day the Annenberg Library opened, students spent most of their time playing computer games, oblivious to the powerful research tools at their command. As a result, games have been banned from the library and may be played only in the student lounge and in dorm rooms.

Electronic-mail correspondence between students has also at times lapsed into "adolescent language," as one school official described it. One such message with obscene language was accidentally directed to the faculty mailing list.

"A lot of elderly secretaries almost had cardiac arrest," said Susan James, a spokeswoman for the school.

But, for the most part, school officials pass off such antics as youthful exuberance. They are confident that the system will be used as it was intended.

"It's sort of a monster that has to be harnessed," Ms. James said. "It can be abused, but the potential to bring information, people and resources together is tremendous." ■ nonprofit public interest organization, said his organization had commissioned a study of the state court system by the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University.

Officials Seek to Widen Lists for Jury Duty

Included in the study, conducted at the end of 1992, were questions on jury service that revealed that 44 percent of those summoned did not report and that 19 percent reported but did not serve.

"That sounded pretty poor indeed," Mr. Haines said, adding that he had written a column about the problem in a recent issue of The New Jersey Law Journal. "My column said that no one was really doing much about it," he said. "And neither did I when I was the assignment judge."

The main reason that court officials in some counties do not pursue those who fail to appear for jury duty is cost.

"Mailing costs for jury summonses are pretty high," Mr. Haines said. "It wouldn't take very many mailings to ruin your budget."

Many Incorrect Addresses

But there is another reason, he said. "We, too, make mistakes," he said. "The addresses we have for people aren't always correct. I've brought people into court who didn't show up for grand jury and I ended up embarrassed," he said, explaining that the notices had been mailed to the wrong addresses.

"I hauled them in and wasted a half a day of their time, and it was really because our records weren't current," he said.

Officials in most counties provide prospective jurors with two notices for jury service. The first is a form questionnaire to determine eligibility; the second, a jury summons or a follow-up if the form isn't returned. If the person doesn't report for duty, or fails to respond to the two notices, officials may issue an arrest warrant.

But that threat is rarely followed through, officials say.

"They don't even arrest fugitives from justice," said John Cannel, executive director of the New Jersey Law Revision Commission, a state commission reviewing the state's laws.

"In the old days, you would believe that if you didn't fill out the form, lightning would strike you," Mr. Cannel said. "Nowadays, what are you going to get, a couple of warnings?"

Undermining of System Seen

Mr. Cannel said blatant disregard of summonses and legal exemptions from service undermined the jury system.

"If you have to impanel a jury for a 12-week trial, are you really going to get a cross section of the community?" he said. "Who can give up their life for 12 weeks? Who can give up their job for 12 weeks? What you're getting are people who are retired and people who are on unemployment."

Defense lawyers agree.

"The younger people are scared to serve," said Walter Lucas, a former deputy attorney general now in private practice in Eatontown. "They say, 'If I miss two weeks of work, my boss will fire me,' " he said. Since that concern is insufficient for an exemption, the judge will typically require the juror to serve. But that, Mr. Lucas said, can cause problems for litigants.

"Do I want to risk having someone on the jury who is so preoccupied about losing their job that they won't follow the evidence?" he said.

Marcia Wenk, acting legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey, agreed.

"One of the fundamentals we rely on in using juries is that they will be impartial and willing to serve," Ms. Wenk said. "If they are disgruntled, there is less of a likelihood that they will put aside biases and be neutral at the outset."

Small pools of prospective jurors, Ms. Wenk said, put added strain on the system.

"It means that many jurors are called more than once, and it places a greater burden on those willing to serve," she said. Moreover, she said, the current system of compiling prospective juror lists from drivers' licenses and voter registrations might also skew juror pools racially and economically.

"It will often exclude people from urban centers and minority jurors, because I think there is a very low voter registration rate in the minority community in some urban areas," she said, adding that the use of driver's license lists somewhat makes up for that shortcoming.

A Lack of Resources

Mr. Cannel of the law revision commission said the current system was failing because it did not provide a broad enough pool of jurors, and because officials did not have the resources to enforce every jury summons that was ignored.

One way to enlarge the juror pool, he said, is to eliminate the statutory exemptions. His commission has proposed legislation that would do just that. That legislation, he said, sponsored by Assemblywoman Loretta Weinberg, Democrat of Fort Lee, is now on second reading before the Assembly.

Another bill, now before the State Senate Judiciary Committee, would increase the fees jurors are paid to $20 a day from $5.

Mr. Cannel said another way to increase the juror pool was to use other lists in addition to the registered voter and driver's license lists. One possibility would be those who file state income tax returns.

Even better, he said, would be lists of people on unemployment, welfare and Social Security. But those lists, he said, are not available because of Federal privacy laws.

'All the Excusing'

Yet another way to increase the pool of prospective jurors, officials say, is to make sure that those who are summoned actually show up.

"We summon 400 jurors a week," said Elizabeth Domingo, assistant administrator of jury management for Hudson County. "But after all the excusing and postponing prior to the reporting date, we're down to half that many. Then, on the first reporting date, about 20 percent fail to report."

But rather than let that 20 percent fall through the cracks, Ms. Domingo said, court officials in Hudson County are tracking them down.

"After check-in, we pull the names of those who fail to report, and we call them," she said. If a person cannot be contacted by telephone, she said, a county sheriff's officer is dispatched to the person's home to find out why he failed to appear and to suggest that he contact the jury manager's office immediately.

"For those who still fail to respond, we send them 'contempt of court' letters," Ms. Domingo said, explaining that a contempt of court charge for ignoring a jury summons can result in a fine.

And in the event that doesn't work, she said, officials in Hudson County are now establishing a procedure whereby the assignment judge of the county can issue an order requiring an individual to appear before him to explain the reason the jury summons went unanswered. If the person fails to appear before the assignment judge, Ms. Domingo said, the judge can issue a bench warrant for the person's arrest.

"We haven't arrested anybody," Ms. Domingo said. "But we do go after them. We work on them on a daily basis." ■

New fuel slashes smog

By Rae Tyson
USA TODAY

By Marcy E. Mullins, USA TODAY

A new wintertime clean fuel program has dramatically improved urban air quality, experts say.

"From an environmental standpoint, it's one of the most positive things to come out of the Clean Air Act" of 1990, says Alaska air quality chief Leonard Verrelli.

With winter air-quality tests in, the Environmental Protection Agency couldn't be happier: 38 urban areas using oxygenated gasoline recorded two days of unhealthy carbon monoxide levels this winter — down from 43 a year ago.

In smog-choked California, the state went the entire winter without violating the federal carbon monoxide standard. Anchorage had its first clean slate for winter in 20 years.

"The use of oxygenated gasoline was a significant factor in reducing health risks," says Jim Boyd, head of the California Air Resources Board.

But consumers are complaining about the odor and cost of the special fuel to combat unhealthy levels of carbon monoxide.

And some wonder if the program is worth it.

"Whether it's reducing (carbon monoxide) or not, you don't trade off one bad problem for another," says Mary Lamielle, director of the National Center for Environmental Health Strategies, a New Jersey-based citizen's group.

Gas stations in 38 of the nation's largest urban areas were required — most for the first time this winter — to only sell the oxygenated fuel, which contains an additive.

Two cities registered unhealthy carbon monoxide this winter: Provo, Utah, and Missoula, Mont.

And the new fuel costs more. In Alaska, where 32,000 residents signed a petition to end the program, winter prices went up 14 cents a gallon. The price increased by lesser amounts elsewhere.

"Prices went up more than they should and people complained about the smell," says Ed Rothschild of Citizen Action in Washington, D.C.

The EPA plans to investigate claims of illness because of odors. The program has ended everywhere but New York, where it runs through April.

The Clean Fuels Development Coalition, an industry group, has reproduced this article to inform the public of progress in protecting the environment. Industry is funding research to find out how oxygenated fuels are related to reports of health effects discussed in this article. USA TODAY granted permission to reprint the article in its entirety.

ART

The Flora of the Pine Barrens, Blooming in Watercolors

By VIVIEN RAYNOR

OCEANVILLE

KNIESKERN'S beak-rush, spatterdock, bladderworts naked and horned: these are not coinages by Lewis Carroll but the names of plants growing in the New Jersey Pine Barrens. Together with the sweet bay (or swamp magnolia) reproduced on this page and three dozen other species, they are the subjects of the botanical illustrations by Robin A. Jess that are now at the Noyes Museum here.

Ms. Jess, whom the State Council on the Arts pronounced a Distinguished Artist for 1990, brings much experience to bear, having illustrated textbooks for the New York Botanical Garden, in the Bronx, as well as Audubon field guides and similar publications.

Her efforts at the Noyes, however, were commissioned by the Pinelands Preservation Alliance, aided by the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, which also supports the show. The purpose is to stimulate public awareness of the close to 1.5 million acres making up the pine barrens, for while much of the area has been designated a national preserve, the danger of human encroachment remains.

A genre that dates back to the Enlightenment, botanical drawings come in two styles — the plant alone and in context. Like Pierre-Joseph Redouté, her predecessor in 18th-century France, Ms. Jess focuses on the plant, although when tackling a bladderwort she includes what appears to be a spider trapped in the bladder.

The artist is a miniaturist adept at details like the tiny red blooms and delicate green "antlers" that characterize the British soldier lichen and the false reindeer lichen and the microscopic fronds of curly grass. She also has a light hand with captions, as when she notes that the golden-club, which looks like yellow asparagus, has a water-repellent film on its leaves, hence its secondary name, "neverwet."

Pine barrens flora ranges from orchids to mountain laurel, whose nectar is said to make honey poisonous; from the carnivorous pitcher plant to the prickly pear, whose yellow flowers bloom for only one day. With Ms. Jess's watercolors as a guide, visitors to the sanctuary will find its plants easy to identify but not, one hopes, to pick.

Apart from anything else, the show draws attention to the museum's location — south of the pine barrens and right next door to the Edward B. Forsythe National Wildlife Refuge. This is a five-mile drive through wetlands that are literally alive with birds — and not short on turtles and foxes either.

Also on view are four other shows, two of which reflect on the Noyes director, Robert Koenig, who came to this repository of duck decoys from the Montclair Art Museum late in 1991. Though he plans to concentrate on folk art, emphasizing work by local artists, Mr. Koenig did, as it were, bring with him the show by three Hispanic-American masters that was reigning at Montclair when he departed.

The masters are Roberto Estopiñan, with nudes sculptured and drawn that look more than a little phallic; Juan Sanchez, whose canvases are bright patterns of painted shapes and photomechanical reproductions, and Daniel Suro, who paints Expressionistic figures and heads on paper, then "flays" them, leaving the torn strips of metaphorical skin hanging.

The show comes with a catalogue by Alejandro Anreus, the Montclair's curator of collections and exhibitions.

Also at Montclair but a decade ago, there was an exceptionally good exhibition of African art drawn from the collection of Judith and Leonard Kahan. Lured by Mr. Koenig to Oceanville, the Cahans have lent again — this time a selection of small to medium-sized figures and heads, together with a case full of carved pipes. They come from the Ibo, Bamana, Dogon, Benin and other West African cultures.

Most demand a second look, but to this observer none more so than the Montol female figure with Cubist facets that stands with arms akimbo and the Ibo headpiece that has a wizened face scored with black lines and patterned in red, black and white.

Evidently, pipes are — or were — as much symbols of status in African status as they were in Europe and the collection includes examples that compare favorably with Meerschaums. Interestingly enough, one specimen in brass is in the shape of a soldier wearing a cap and a tunic with three buttons — a relic of the German presence in Africa, before World War I?

Of the other shows, one is of ceramics by Malcolm Wright, an American, and Takashi Nakazato, a potter from Japan, and is an "import" from at the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield, Mass. The others are juried displays of paintings by older citizens and by students at Stockton State College.

Though the older artists beat the younger by several lengths, none come close to Leslie Christofferson, who is in his 80's and is no less of an artist for having produced only one work. This is a house for purple martins that is a non-leaning Tower of Pisa with a red dome.

If the part-time tenants have relocated to a modern project, as seems likely, they must be keeping the neighbors up all night chattering about the mansion that was.

Since Mr. Koenig has arrived, the Noyes has developed a relationship with the Composers Guild of New Jersey, under its director, Robert Pollock. In addition to acting as a cosponsor of the concert of African and American music scheduled for May 17, the guild plans performances of new work up until June. Who knows what will happen when the museum's theater becomes a reality?

All the exhibitions continue at the museum through next Sunday except for the one by the older artists, which remains through June 20. Hours are 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. Wednesday through Sunday. ■

DINING OUT

Spanish Fare Served in Large Portions

By VALERIE SINCLAIR

NEW JERSEY diners have been willing for many years to trek into Newark just for a taste of Spanish or Portuguese food. But in recent times several Iberian restaurants have opened in other areas. One of the newest is Spain 92, which opened almost a year ago in a small shopping center near the Somerville Circle in the Somerset County community of Raritan.

The owners, Sergio Seijas and Manny Feijoo (who is also the chef), are from Galicia, in the northernmost part of Spain. They worked in restaurants in the Ironbound section of Newark for several years. Noting that many of their customers came from the Flemington, Princeton, Somerville and Somerset Hills area, they decided to look in that part of New Jersey when it came time to open their own restaurant.

If the crush and the lines waiting to get in on Saturday nights are anything to go by, then lovers of Spanish food have already found Spain 92. Reservations are not accepted for fewer than six people, so weeknights, when the casual but cheerful and brightly lighted bar and restaurant are less crowded, are preferred by some.

The wine list is tiny — five white and five red wines — but prices are fair, and the sangría (red or white) is slightly tart and very good at $11.50 a carafe. Service is pleasant, but either the kitchen or the waiters are exceedingly slow, even when the restaurant is not full.

The menu is similar to those found in other Spanish restaurants in New Jersey; there are few surprises apart from the lobsters. Ironbound restaurants are known for their enormous lobsters at reasonable prices, but at Spain 92, we were steered away from them each time we tried to order. We were told they were only one and a half pounds and not worth cooking. When we were finally allowed to order lobster in hot sauce, we understood why. The serving consisted of two small lobster tails with a texture like cotton (could they have been frozen?) in an otherwise excellent spicy tomato sauce containing red and green peppers.

But prices are really very good, and portions are large. Appetizers like garlic shrimp (a mound of shrimp in a rich garlic sauce spiked with red pepper) or shrimp grilled in their shells, glistening with oil, garlic and pepper, were excellent and large enough for a main course. This was also true of the lightly breaded shrimp, a dish of sliced and broiled chorizo sausage, and the dozen fresh mushrooms stuffed with crab meat and sprinkled with Sherry. Stuffed scallops (which is a misnomer because the sea scallops are topped with crab meat and coated with a light sauce and grated cheese) and mussels in an excellent tomato-based marinera sauce were also good.

Main-course standouts were a delicious moist trout, stuffed with crab meat, and either veal or chicken Coruñesa. In this dish the thin slices of veal or chicken are sautéed in an egg and flour coating and served in rather a lot of Sherry and brandy-flavored mushroom sauce. Unfortunately, the garlic chicken looked almost identical. Usually, this dish is made with chicken sautéed on the bone, but here the thin boneless slices were also used. Although the sauce was good, the preparation was disappointing. But rack of lamb with an interesting tomato sauce was cooked as requested and was a change from the ordinary.

When paella Valenciana (with chicken, pork and sausage as well as seafood) was ordered, paella marinera (just with seafood) arrived. Although it was acceptable and contained lobster, scallops, shrimp and clams, it seemed a little low on both flavor and shellfish. A whole red snapper baked with Sherry and lemon juice was overcooked and dry, and both the clams and the shrimp in green sauce were sloppy and the sauce was glutinous.

The wafer-thin, crisp deep-fried Spanish potatoes were addictive, and the Spanish rice, an alternative side dish, was also good.

Desserts were a mixed bag. The flan was excellent one night and awful another, and rice pudding was stodgy and flavorless. The only desserts unquestionably worth ordering are the sherbets imported from Spain. They are tucked into containers that highlight the flavors. So an intensely flavored apple sherbet is served in a fresh green apple, coconut in a half coconut, and so on. Any flavor is worth ordering. ■

"I recommend The New York Times to any restaurant interested in effective advertising." Armen Petrossian, Owner Petrossian Restaurant

"Our restaurant had a new chef, new style of food, new prix fixe menus, and we were looking for a way to convey that to current and potential customers. The decision was easy: We chose The New York Times based on previous advertising results. Despite the initial cost, we profited in the end because our customers rely on the advertising information in The Times. We can't think of another publication in New York with that power."

MUSIC

Harpsichordist to Open Cape May Fete

By RENA FRUCHTER

THE harpsichordist Igor Kipnis directs a festival of early music and does his share of historical research. But, unlike the early music specialists, he believes it will take a broader view to "get the harpsichord out of the attic," he said.

Mr. Kipnis, well known as a Baroque harpsichordist, also plays "crossover, rags and blues, calypso and tangos written for the harpsichord," he said.

"People are surprised," he said. "The nonclassical pieces are fun to play. People say, 'We didn't know the harpsichord could do that.' " The harpsichord, he said, "is rediscovered every 20 or 30 years."

Mr. Kipnis will open the fourth Cape May Music Festival with a recital, which is his festival debut, next Sunday at 8:30 P.M. and an orchestral appearance on May 19, both at the Congress Hall Hotel. He will perform works from the 18th and 20th centuries.

The festival will feature a return appearance by the New York Chamber Ensemble, in residence for four of the festival's six weeks. The ensemble and the festival are under the musical direction of Stephen Rogers Radcliffe. The ensemble will be expanded for several events to form the Cape May Festival Orchestra.

The festival is presented by the Cape-May based Mid-Atlantic Center for the Arts, in association with the Cape May Institute. The event reflects a strong relationship between local businesses and the community, which have set up a partnership between the festival and bed-and-breakfast places and hotels, offering package deals for concertgoers.

Mr. Kipnis, a Harvard graduate, has devoted many years to dusting off and polishing an instrument whose place in this century has never been solidly established. He has given concerts throughout the United States. "I have only three states left to play — North Dakota, Rhode Island and Mississippi," he said.

He often performs and gives master classes at universities, but he was faced with a problem at those institutions. "Kids don't go to concerts," he said. "They hear no classical music, except some in courses, and connected with grades."

Jeremy Kipnis

Igor Kipnis will perform at the Cape May Music Festival.

Looking for a way around the problem, he began playing for university students in the cafeteria during lunch and dinner. "I was your basic cocktail harpsichordist," he said. "I used amplification, with a running commentary on the music. But you can take Muhammad to the mountain, and the mountain still may not come to the concert."

Mr. Kipnis's performance with the Cape May Festival Orchestra on May 19 will include two works — Manuel de Falla's Harpsichord Concerto and Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, with Julie Rosenfeld, a violinist, and Susan Rotholz, a flutist (both orchestra members), joining Mr. Kipnis in the Bach work as the solo group.

The recital next Sunday will include works by Handel, Bach, Cimarosa and Scarlatti, as well as a set of four pieces written for Mr. Kipnis by American composers and grouped by him under the title "An American Quartet."

The set includes "Cluster's Last Stand on the Ground," by Dan Locklair; "Variations on Sacred Hymn Tunes," by Eric Salzman; Scherzo for Harpsichord, by Leopold Godowski 3d, and "Golden Heart," by Arthur Frackenpohl. The four pieces, written in the last decade, are "palatable, each in a different style and typical Americana," Mr. Kipnis said.

"Golden Heart," he added, is the nickname for Fairbanks, Alaska, where Mr. Kipnis met Mr. Frackenpohl. After the American pieces, he will end the program with seven sonatas by Scarlatti.

The Falla concerto, which he will perform on May 19, is "one of the great 20th-century classics," Mr. Kipnis said. "It's an acerbic piece, influenced by Stravinsky. The first time I heard it, I hated it."

The work is scored for six instruments, including the harpsichord, but because of its complexity, he said, "it helps to have it conducted." He will use some amplification (a point of great dispute among harpsichordists) — not for balance, but, he said, "to give the audience a sense that this is a harpsichord concerto, not 'whatever happened to the harpsichord?' We won't have rock volume."

Mr. Kipnis owns three harpsichords. One is "period style and lower pitch," which he reserves for the the Connecticut Early Music Festival, held in the New London area. A Stamford resident, Mr. Kipnis directs the festival.

In Cape May, he will play a two-manual harpsichord made in 1961 by Jersey City-based builders, Rutkowski & Robinette.

The Cape May Music Festival will run through June 27, with an emphasis on young artists. The New York Chamber Ensemble and Festival Orchestra will play 11 concerts. Other ensemble performances will include the Colorado String Quartet on May 22, the American Brass Quintet on May 29 and 30, the Hexagon Piano and Wind Sextet on June 10, the New Jersey Chamber Music Society on June 14, a New Jersey Symphony Orchestra chamber ensemble on June 21 and the Calliope Renaissance Band on June 23.

Soloists will include Andreas Haefliger and John Bayless, pianists; Markham and Broadway, duo pianists; Butch Thompson, jazz pianist; Pamela Frank, violinist, and Oscar Petty Jr., oboist.

The Cape May festival has grown very quickly, Mr. Radcliffe said. "This is a year for consolidating past strength," he said. The number of events is about the same as last year's. "The budget has grown, but the concerts have not," he said, adding that artists in the first couple of years played for reduced fees. Compensation, he said, is now "on a more realistic level."

The guest artists and the orchestra are housed in the Victorian resort town. "It's an early summer vacation," Mr. Radcliffe said.

Most concerts are held in the Congress Hall Hotel. General admission is $10, or $5 for students. A three-concert pass is $25, a five-concert pass, $40, and a 10-concert pass, $75. The number for information and reservations is (609) 884-5404. ■

CRAFTS

Jewelry: Gold, Yes, but Also Paper or Clay

By BETTY FREUDENHEIM

ALL that glitters is certainly not gold in the world of craft jewelry. The demand for personal adornment is so strong that metalsmiths who create brooches and earrings of 14-karat gold and sterling silver have to compete with ceramists, fiber artists and even a few painters and sculptors who have entered their field.

"The range of media has expanded enormously," said Vitti Van Cleef. When she opened her gallery, Vitti, in Upper Montclair nearly two decades ago, she sold one-of-a-kind necklaces, earrings and pins of precious metals and cut stones. Now the cases are filled with art jewelry made from paper, clay, plastic, leather, bones, imported beads and shells along with more traditional gold and silver.

At Vitti and another gallery that features craft jewelry, Beautiful Things in Scotch Plains, prices are based on the artist's fame, the materials and the intricacy of the work.

Whimsical pieces under $25 sell fast. At Vitti, out of a dozen latex necklaces, depicting a row of red, white and yellow roosters dancing on roller skates, only one remains. Dangling paper earrings, painted with flowers, are so inexpensive that some customers buy several pairs at a time.

"The age groups are expanding their taste," Ms. Van Cleef said. Funky designs and innovative materials are no longer the exclusive preserve of the younger set.

"I sold my most unique necklace, made of paper beads and semiprecious stones," she said, "to a lady who told me repeatedly that she was 80 years old. And there are teen-agers who are becoming more conservative; they come in looking for little gold earrings."

Gift buyers frequently seek out jewelry that could be considered as an investment: commissioned work of gold and sterling silver, priced at several thousand dollars. Ms. Van Cleef refers to these pieces as "serious stuff," although the designs may be filled with fanciful motifs.

Margaret Barnaby's dramatic cuff bracelet of 18-karat gold and sterling silver falls halfway into the serious category. Swirling curves of precious metals are etched with lines that resemble the traces left on the sand by receding tides. The piece is set with chunks of coral and shells — a beachcomber's delight.

Helga von Hackenberg of Plainfield combines conventionally cut amethyst and topaz stones with unconventional antique black buttons. Silver blossoms, crinkled ribbons and tiny twisted tendrils turn them into floating corsages. One pin includes the towers of a fairy-tale palace. This artist's paintings convey the same romantic fantasies.

Ina Chapler of Englewood Cliffs enjoys creating timeless designs. One of her necklaces combines stoneware beads, fired in her kiln, with others that were fashioned from ostrich eggshells and an antique shell. "I like to recycle things that have no intrinsic value," she said. The bottom fringe contains the remains of a dinner: chicken bones that were cleaned and cut before being strung as beads.

Recent visits to Turkey, Greece and Israel inspired Sharona Gamliel's shaman prayer pouches. "The series reflects images of Ottoman art and the artifacts of the Topkapi Palace and harem," she said. "A strong bond with my Yemenite heritage led to an interest in highly decorated body ornamentation and its spiritual significance."

Her miniature leather satchels are suspended like pendants on a chain. Each one is ornamented with antique charms, beads, chains, metallic thread, Tiffany glass and segments of old portraits that have been printed on fabric by a photocopying process.

The Vitti gallery, at 590 Valley Road in Upper Montclair, is open from 10 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. Tuesday through Saturday.

Henri Leighton, owner of the Beautiful Things gallery in Scotch Plains, has been making jewelry for more than 40 years. "When the craft jewelry movement started in Greenwich Village in the late 1940's, each artist had a personal outlook and style," he said. "Now, the minute someone is successful, there are lots of imitators — it's highly competitive."

"I avoid the slick look of manufactured things," he said. "Handmade jewelry should bear the marks and imperfections that are characteristic of things made by hand."

His recent works, called "Cubic Constructions," feature small gold block modules that he assembles into pins or necklaces. The shiny ones are made by hand; textured ones are castings. These tiny cubes are held together with minuscule rivets, so they are very flexible.

One case features the gold and silver jewelry made by his wife, Paula Leighton, who died last year. Her handcut heart pendants have the lacy delicacy of Victorian valentines.

Thomas Mann's hearts and hands send a different message — "Techno-Romantic," he calls it. There is always humor, surprise and a bit of mystery hidden his work. Charms, bits of old photos and parts of mass-produced hardware are bolted to the silhouetted backgrounds. Hand-tooled letters and abstract motifs invite interpretations or a smile.

Ray Tracy is a Navajo silversmith, but the clean lines and strong geometry of his work are far removed from the distinctive squash blossom necklaces made by his tribe. Rectangles of red coral or turquoise are outlined and criss-crossed with thin strips of silver. When asked if he ever made a truly outrageous piece, his answer was "Yes, once a year."

There are three cases of earrings in styles that range from the bold and dramatic to coy little pigs and fish. "We carry gold paper jewelry, covered with acrylic, which looks like pure gold," Mr. Leighton said.

The porcelain pins of Flew Well have gray, white and black matte glazes touched with gold. The effect is of a striking sophistication.

"Really expensive jewels are not in anymore," Mr. Leighton said. The basic requirement is that jewelry must be wearable, no matter what the price or the material. Prices start at $15 and go up into the several thousands for a commissioned one-of-a-kind piece.

The Beautiful Things gallery, at 1838 East Second Street in Scotch Plains, is open Monday through Saturday from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. and until 8 P.M. Thursday. ■

municipal governments were tried in several states at that time and still exist today, as they do in New Jersey.

Charles Matthews, who is serving his eighth term as Mayor of Newton, remembers the town's transition to a nonpartisan system 40 years ago. "The Democrats dominated local politics at the time," he said, "and after the war, a group of fairly progressive individuals got together to oppose the system." That group of "dissident Democrats and Republicans" nominated a coalition slate for local offices, he said, and their efforts led to the adoption of the current nonpartisan system in 1953.

Richard Salkin, the Hackensack City Attorney, said that municipalities might convert from nonpartisan to partisan status after a petition drive leading to to a public referendum. Sometimes, he said, a charter study committee is also a part of the conversion process.

In nonpartisan towns, Mr. Salkin said, Republican and Democratic county organizations may not contribute to local contests, but individual political clubs may make such contributions.

In Paterson, reformers curtailed the powers of the corrupt Board of Aldermen in 1907 by giving virtually all authority to the mayor, although local elections still included candidates with traditional party labels. That system was abandoned in 1972 in favor of a nonpartisan mayor-and-council system in which the mayor is still elected directly.

Low Spring Turnout

Among the advantages of the nonpartisan system, Dr. Bodner said, is that local coalitions can develop to support or defeat specific programs. Such coalitions thrive in municipalities like Jersey City and Hackensack, he said, while in other towns candidates tend to run as individuals.

But holding local elections in the spring often means a low voter turnout. Nationally, Mr. Wolfe said, only 5 to 10 percent of the electorate turns out to vote in spring elections. Mayor Matthews in Newton noted that spring elections in his town were routinely characterized by "a poor turnout — especially if the weather is good."

While they may not bring out large numbers of voters, in some cases nonpartisan elections do produce a plethora of candidates. In Asbury Park, three separate five-member slates are battling for seats on the City Council. Four unaffiliated candidates are also on the ballot.

The Monmouth County Democratic chairman, Mr. Scudieri, said one slate, known as Our Ticket, was headed by a local Democratic leader, David Pareott, and composed entirely of Democrats. The two other slates mix candidates from the two major parties.

Despite the existence of the all-Democratic ticket, Mr. Scudieri said the county party organization had not intervened in the Asbury Park elections. His Republican counterpart, William Dowd, confirmed that Republicans had also refrained from intervention.

Misnomer in Some Towns

Despite the lack of party participation, the nonpartisan designation is a misnomer in some towns, where local citizen committees bring a partisan element to local races.

Barbara Haver, head of the township government committee of the the New Jersey League of Women Voters, said that over the years groups of Montclair voters had formed ad hoc committees to support or oppose specific initiatives. These committees review the qualifications of candidates, throwing their support behind those who share their views.

In Glen Ridge, a long-established body, the Civic Conference Committee, has so much influence that its slate of candidates is almost always elected.

Mr. Wolfe said he thought the number of nonpartisan towns would shrink further because voters prefer the security of identification with established political parties.

State Senator Raymond J.Lesniak of Elizabeth, the state Democratic chairman, said that while the state Democratic organization had not supported past efforts to convert nonpartisan towns, such conversions were a goal for the future.

The state Republican chairman, Mark Herr, said that the Republican organization was not interested in converting towns to partisan status. "I think the 1992 election showed us that a lot of people will vote for a person or movement they see as being independent," he said in an allusion to Ross Perot. ■

Glen Ridge: A Stronghold Of Nonpartisan Elections

GLEN RIDGE has had nonpartisan elections for most of its 100-year history, although, unlike most other nonpartisan towns, it holds its local elections in November.

Dr. David Allen, a professor of political science at the City College of New York and a 10-year resident of Glen Ridge, said the reason for the November voting was financial. "In November, the county, rather than the town, pays the cost of the election," he said.

To some people (and to the New Jersey State League of Municipalities), Glen Ridge looks less like a nonpartisan town than an entrenched single-party stronghold. The reason is the Civic Conference Committee.

Barbara Haver, head of the township government committee of the New Jersey League of Women Voters, says that as far as she knows, Glen Ridge is the only municipality in the state with such an arrangement.

The Civic Conference Committee was founded in 1914 as a means of keeping rough-and-tumble partisan battles out of local elections. It is composed of delegates from local civic organizations, like the Glen Ridge Women's Club and the South End Association, a property owners' group. Organizations that are purely religious, social or athletic in nature may not send delegates to the committee.

The committee screens potential candidates for mayor, the Council and the school board. Dr. Allen, a current Glen Ridge Councilman and former civic committee chairman, said the system insured that "public officials are chosen exclusively for what they can offer to the town."

Once an individual is part of a civic committee slate, his election is virtually assured. Since 1914, very few candidates have been elected to public office in Glen Ridge without the organization's endorsement.

The value of the Glen Ridge system, Dr. Allen said, is that it insures that qualified citizens rather than career politicians fill the highest local offices. "No mayor of Glen Ridge has ever gone on to higher office," he said.

Dr. Allen added that the civic committee system attracts office seekers who might have avoided the electoral process in towns dominated by party politics. In Glen Ridge, a committee endorsement makes it possible for a candidate to run for local office without much of the intensive campaigning that is sometimes necessary to attract voter attention in other municipalities.

Eleven organizations currently send delegates to the civic committee. The Glen Ridge Republican Party is one of them; the Glen Ridge Democratic Party is not. Over the years, the Democrats have sometimes fielded opposition candidates. Now, Dr. Allen said, they may become a committee member organization.

Opponents of the committee — including a group called Citizens for Representative Government, which ran unsuccessful candidates in the recent school board election — criticize the organization as being unrepresentative and discouraging the nomination of multiple candidates. Debate about the fairness and inclusiveness of the committee intensifies every year at election time, but the committee has remained the big winner at the polls.

The town historian, Eleanor Webster, said the committee "has worked because of the small size of the town." ■

A TRADITION OF CARING: GIVE TO THE FRESH AIR FUND

JERSEYANA | Marc Mappen

EVERYBODY goes to Atlantic City for a convention: beauty queens, teachers, plumbers, salespeople. So why not gangsters? Back in May 1929, America's leading bootleggers, hit men and racketeers gathered in the city of saltwater taffy to do what conventioneers love to do: talk shop, cut a few deals and have a good time.

The crime lords came from the nation's major cities. Al Capone himself was there, along with other luminaries of the Chicago underworld like Frank Nitti and Jake (Greasy Thumb) Guzik. From New York came a large delegation that included Charles (Lucky) Luciano, Dutch Schultz, Joe Adonis, Albert Anastasia, Meyer Lansky and Louis Lepke.

Among the others in attendance were Charles (King) Solomon of Boston, Abe Bernstein of Detroit, Johnny Lazia of Kansas City and Waxy Gordon of Philadelphia. New Jersey was represented by Abner (Longie) Zwillman of Newark and the host, Enoch (Nucky) Johnson of Atlantic City.

A 1929 gathering of gangsters in Atlantic City.

The problem the mobsters faced was that competition was getting out of hand. Rival gangs were muscling in on one another's territory. Only a few months before, seven Chicago mobsters had been gunned down in the St. Valentine's Day massacre by the Capone gang.

So for the first time, gangsters from all the ethnic groups met to talk things over. It is not clear whose idea it was: some historians of crime think it was Frank Costello; others say Johnny Torrio or Lansky or Luciano or even Capone. Most likely it was just one of those ideas whose time had come. Atlantic City was a convenient location for other reasons beside sea breezes: the host, Johnson, controlled both crime and politics in Atlantic County.

The gathering was not particularly secret. Newspapers carried stories about it. This was the era of Prohibition, when Americans cheerfully broke the law by drinking, and the gangsters who furnished the bootleg liquor were celebrities like prizefighters and movie stars. The Atlantic City police said they would arrest Capone on sight, but since at the moment he was not wanted on any charge, Scarface Al (known as Snorky to his friends) strolled around town unmolested.

One account of the event says that meetings were held in a conference room at the President Hotel; another says the meetings were shifted from hotel to hotel. Luciano said years later that Johnson had originally booked the conference in an exclusive upper-crust hotel, giving the mobsters Anglo-Saxon aliases when he made the room reservations. Luciano said that when the gangsters with the phony names arrived, the hotel manager threw them out, and that Nucky had to hastily move the meeting to the President.

Luciano also said that to discuss important negotiations in private, the mobsters would be wheeled in rolling chairs to a secluded beach at the end of the Boardwalk, where they would take off their shoes and socks and wade into the water to talk business.

Luciano's account seems unlikely. It is hard to imagine Capone and his peers standing like storks in the surf. It is also improbable that Johnson, the boss of Atlantic City, would make the mistake of picking the wrong hotel.

Capone himself later gave an account to a lawman of what happened at the conference (he was under arrest at the time): "We talked over our troubles for three days. We all agreed at the end of that time to sign on the dotted line to bury the past and forget warfare in the future for the general good of all concerned."

The gangsters pledged to respect one another's territory, to work together to bribe the authorities and to negotiate disputes peacefully. Whether they actually signed a paper to that effect is, once again, doubtful.

One other important piece of business negotiated at the meeting was to set up a telegraph service that would flash racing results to illegal betting parlors around the country.

One crime writer said the conference "galvanized the gangs of America into a powerful single unit." That's probably an exaggeration, but the gathering clearly did increase cooperation in the underworld.

What did they do for relaxation? The traditional story is that they spent their evenings as mobsters are supposed to, furiously gambling, drinking and womanizing. Maybe so, but isn't it possible that they once in a while acted like ordinary tourists, doing things like walking the Boardwalk and buying saltwater taffy?

That's at least how Capone seems to have behaved. An Atlantic City newspaper described the Chicago gangster: "Seated in a rolling chair at Kentucky Avenue and the Boardwalk yesterday afternoon, puffing on a big black cigar and surrounded by half a dozen henchmen, 'Al' took in the sights of the famous street and breathed deeply and freely of the ozone with apparently no care in the world."

Associated Press

Charles (Lucky) Luciano, top, and Al Capone joined other gangsters for several days in Atlantic City, left, in May of 1929.

Lansky took his bride, Anna Citron of Hoboken, to the convention, and no doubt the newlyweds spent a romantic moment or two on the Boardwalk watching the surf roll in.

After it was all over, the conventioneers made their way back to their home territories. Everyone, that is, except Capone. It seems he was driven to Philadelphia to catch the Broadway Limited back to Chicago. He had some time to kill, so he and his bodyguard, Frank Rio, went to the movies.

On the way out of the theater, he was arrested by a Philadelphia police detective who found that the gangster had a .38-caliber revolver in his pocket. (A .38 seems a bit quaint in this day of Uzis and assault rifles.) Capone was sentenced to a year in prison for carrying a concealed weapon.

Luciano, as usual, embellished the story. He said that the arrest was planned; that the other mobsters at Atlantic City demanded Capone do some time in jail in order to take the heat off everyone else.

A more likely explanation is that Capone set up the arrest on his own initiative. He evidently wanted to stay away from Chicago for a while, since his archenemy George (Bugs) Moran, who wasn't invited to the convention, was trying to assassinate him in revenge for the St. Valentine's Day affair. One possible bit of proof is that the Philadelphia detective who arrested Capone was reputed to have known him socially in Florida.

Capone probably expected to spend 90 days or so in a suburban Pennsylvania jail, the standard sentence for carrying a gun in the city of brotherly love. But the uncooperative judge put him away for a year.

Capone's career went downhill after that. Not long after his return to Chicago, he was put on trial for income tax evasion and wound up working in the laundry at Alcatraz. He died of syphilis in 1947.

Many of the other participants in the Atlantic City conference came to a bad end. Zwillman and Nitti committed suicide, Schultz and Anastasia were murdered, Luciano and Adonis were deported, Lepke died in the electric chair and Johnson went to prison for a decade.

Maybe they all looked back at that pleasant week in Atlantic City as a golden time in their lives. ■

DESIGNER SHOW HOUSE

The Pretty Brook Farm, the former home of Dean Mathey, who provided much of the land for the Princeton Day School campus and made an additional gift of the house when he died in 1972, is serving as the eighth designer show house of the Junior League of Greater Princeton through next Sunday.

The original structure, built before the Revolutionary War, was preserved when an architect, Arthur Holden, redesigned the house for Mathey and created new wings between 1926 and 1928.

The house, displaying the work of 27 interior designers in a setting enhanced by seven landscapers, will open at 10 A.M. Monday through Saturday. Closing time will be at 3 P.M., but at 8 P.M. on Thursday and at 4 P.M. on Saturday. Sunday hours will be noon to 4 P.M.

Tickets are $15, or $12 for the elderly. A lecture on protecting an investment in furniture will be given by Mark Reed, a furniture restorer and conservator, at 10 A.M. Thursday. Lunch will be available except on Sunday, when tea will be the fare. The farm is on the Great Road.

THEATER READINGS

For Crossroads Theater Company audiences in New Brunswick, the fourth annual series of staged readings known as "Genesis Festival: A Celebration of New Voices in African-American Theater" can be something like a sneak preview of coming attractions.

Plays from festivals past, by Denise Nicholas ("Buses"), Ntozake Shange ("The Love Space Demands") and Kathleen McGhee-Anderson ("Oak and Ivy" and "Mothers"), and an adaptation by Ruby Dee ("The Disappearance") evolved into full productions.

And an early work by Anna Deavere Smith, who won fame and prizes with her one-woman, 29-character piece, "Fires in the Mirror," is a Genesis product. Under the title "Dreams," it was scheduled for the current Crossroads season and is now on hold.

"Our focus this year is on unrecognized playwrights, as opposed to the celebrity or performance art," said Sydné Mahone, the theater's director of play development, who describes her role as director of the series, her brainchild, as "steering the design of the festival."

Ms. Mahone selects the plays in collaboration with the Crossroads artistic director, Ricardo Kahn, and the literary manager, Pamela Faith Jackson.

Remaining plays in Genesis 1993, which began on April 30 and lasts through next Sunday, exemplify the divergent styles Ms. Mahone seeks. "Talking Bones" by Shay Youngblood (today at 5 P.M.) is part real, part fantastical, part ritualistic. It concerns three generations of women atop a burial ground. "And the World Laughs With You" (Thursday and Saturday at 8 P.M.) is a traditional naturalistic drama by Karimah, and "Homer Gee and the Rhapsodies in 'The Fall of Detroit'" by Ifa Bayeza, who is Ms. Shange's sister, is described as a comedic epic (Friday at 8 P.M.).

Other Genesis events are "Saturday's Children," a program of short plays by seventh and eighth graders in the New Brunswick public schools, to be presented on Saturday at 3 P.M. and a gospel concert next Sunday at 5 P.M.

All performances are at the theater, at 7 Livingston Avenue. Tickets cost $15 for each performance; Crossroads subscribers are entitled to one free.

Saxophone Is Gaining, Though Not All Applaud

By CARLOTTA GULVAS SWARDEN

THERE are so many saxophone players in the Millburn High School band that they play in two shifts at concerts. Otherwise, says the school's musical director, Stanley West, they would "drown out the rest of the band."

In New Jersey and across the nation, the saxophone is coming on strong. Ten years ago, said Raymond Benedetto, owner of the National Educators Music Company in Mountainside, which sells instruments to parents and schools in 45 states, the saxophone ranked 10th in popularity; it has since moved to second place, just behind the clarinet.

Mr. Benedetto said that according to the New York City-based National Association of Band Instruments Manufacturers, 76,418 saxophones were sold nationwide last year.

President Clinton's very public devotion to the saxophone has helped stimulate the market for the instrument, music store owners and school band directors say. "When Bill Clinton played on the Arsenio Hall show and later at his inauguration parties," Mr. Benedetto said, "it really took off."

But sales also increased when Lisa Simpson of "The Simpsons," the television cartoon show, took up the instrument, he added. And in any event, the saxophone has been doing very well on its own in recent years.

Demand at Music Stores

Some music stores have been cashing in on the appeal of the saxophone after the President's public performances.

"People come in here and point to the tenor sax and say that's what Clinton plays," said John Andrini, manager of Sam's in Paramus, where saxophone sales have increased 30 percent since the fall of 1992. "It's a real attention getter. But when they see the price of a professional one at $2,000 to $3,000, they usually settle for an amateur horn for maybe $700 to $900."

Art Martin teaches band at Voorhees High School in Glen Gardner and is president of the New Jersey chapter of the Association of Jazz Educators. In his school's band of 50, there are 10 students who play the saxophone.

Norman Y. Lono for The New York Times

Saxophone players in the Millburn High School band.

'It is better to have too many saxophones than turn kids off to music.'

"It's going to get even hotter," he said. "It begins with the young people in feeder elementary schools. They pick up the instrument there and continue playing into the high school. I think over the next couple of years it will really take off, especially if Clinton plays it again in public."

Guy Vinipal, owner of the City Music Center in Kenilworth, which rents instruments to school systems in New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania and New York, says that the impact of the President's saxophone playing was not reflected in rentals for the 1992 school year because most orders are placed in September.

"I unquestionably anticipate Clinton's influence will be reflected in next year's orders in schools," he said. "We saw a similar phenomenon 10 years ago when Pee-wee Herman and Clarence Clemens, who played with Bruce Springsteen's earlier band, were shown all over MTV. The sales increased."

Limits in School Bands

But some school-band leaders say the popularity of the instrument can be a drawback if too many younger students take it up, because that will inevitably lead to school bands that are filled with saxophones.

At Millburn High School there are 17 saxophones in a band of 138. The criteria for competing in an all-state band contest, Mr. West says, include a band with an average of 120 members with no more than seven saxophones — four altos, two tenors and one baritone.

Some music educators are attempting to play up other instruments to avoid a saxophone surplus. In the Millburn Township school system, students in the elementary grades are not permitted to make the saxophone their first instrument.

"We saw the bulge in the saxophones coming," Mr. West said. "So, we try to encourage and promote alternative instruments. But ultimately we cannot always influence what students choose to play."

There is concern in Summit as well. Angelo Merola, musical supervisor for the school system, said that with younger students, "we don't say you can't play this, but rather we present a different choice." There are 12 saxophones in his 100-piece band.

Mr. Vinipal said some schools had asked his rental company to de-emphasize the saxophone to avoid saxophone-heavy bands. "We don't want to discourage kids from playing at all, just try to redirect them to other instruments," he said.

Some music educators, however, are not so worried about the wave of saxophones. At Wayne Valley High School, Gerald Tedesco, director of instrumental music, has found a way to accommodate all 15 saxophone players in his 85-piece band. "They play softer to achieve a balanced sound," he said.

High Rental Fee

Aside from the effect on the saxophone population, Mr. Merola said Mr. Clinton's music had been a boon. "The fact that a United States President is playing any instrument is a tremendous boost to school music programs," he said, "because he acts as a role model to the younger people. The bottom line is that it is better to have too many saxophones than to turn kids off to music."

The popularity of the instrument has been achieved despite the fact that the rental fees, which can be applied to the eventual purchase of an instrument, are higher than for many other instruments. Ray Wiggins, director of jazz at Pennsauken High School in Pennsauken, said it cost $400 to rent a saxophone compared with $185 for a clarinet.

"Even though it is less expensive to rent a clarinet than a saxophone, parents generally do nothing to change their child's mind about their choice of an instrument," Mr. Wiggins said. "If the child wants to play it, the parents just seem to go along."

Mr. Martin, the Glen Gardner teacher, is himself a saxophonist in a jazz band, and he views the rise of the instrument as one aspect of the public's rekindled interest in jazz.

"From Kenny G to President Clinton," he said, "the sax is taking off, and people want to hear the music that features the sax the best. First the kids like the sound; then the next thing you know the adults are going to jazz clubs to hear it too." ■

Rivalries Erupt on Using Tourism Tax

Separate efforts in an ad war while spending $900,000.

By STEWART AIN

FLUSH with new-found money from the recently imposed 0.75 percent hotel and motel room tax in Suffolk County, East End communities have started an advertising war against one another.

"Come to the North Fork and don't forget your glasses," reads the headline of a full-page ad from the Southold Town Promotion Committee. One for the South Fork Promotion Committee reads, "The Hamptons are ready and waiting."

There is another ad aimed at attracting tourists to the North Fork and still another trying to lure them to Stony Brook, both of which appeared in a magazine in New England.

The Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau in East Meadow is paying for 70 percent of the ads with some of the $68,000 it has received from the room tax, which took effect on Nov. 19. The remainder of the costs were paid by promotion committees from their shares of the tax. Nassau County has no such levy.

The president of the visitors' bureau, Michael Davidson, estimated that the room tax would raise $900,000 this year. He said $600,000 would go to his bureau and the rest would be used by the County Parks, Recreation and Conservation Department to maintain parks, historical structures, museums and cultural organizations.

Although it is too early to gauge the success of the ads, questions are being raised about the objectives of the campaigns.

"I think they would do better if all of them joined together," the general manager of the Long Island Marriott in Uniondale, Edward L. Rudzinski, said. "The Marriott Hotels do their advertising together and can then afford to buy whole-page ads." The ads sell an idea, an escape weekend, he added, and not an individual hotel.

Similarly, if the room-tax money was pooled to buy ads that sold all of Long Island or even Suffolk County instead of just the South Fork or the North Fork, Mr. Rudzinski said, the Island "could really be competitive" against regions like Virginia Beach and Cape Cod.

John H. Scheetz, chairman of the South Fork Promotion Committee, which includes several chambers of commerce on the East End, said his group had tried to "cooperate, but there had been a feeling in eastern Suffolk that the Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau was dominated by Nassau and western Suffolk."

"Those areas cater primarily to convention business and bus tours,"

Filling Nassau's Biggest Empty Area

The abandoned sand-washing tower on Moorewood Property in Port Washington overlooking Hempstead Harbor.

By TERRY CONSIDINE WILLIAMS

TO the east, a harbor sparkles in the shimmering spring air. Waves nudge a pristine beach. The setting could put a poet to work.

But in the other direction, the landscape offers a jumble of commerce, desolation and desecration, with just sprigs of natural beauty struggling to survive on the site of the former sand pits.

The 460-acre tract, known as the Morewood Property, on West Shore Road in Port Washington overlooks the longest stretch of shoreline in North Hempstead and is the biggest parcel of vacant land in Nassau County, according to Arthur Kunz of the Long Island Regional Planning Board.

6 Major Proposals Before Board

For two years the future of the property has been the focus of avid attention. Now, six major proposals are before the Town Board, offering mixed residential, commercial and recreational development.

Several groups have also expressed interest in smaller parcels for college campuses, housing for the elderly and retailing. The board is preparing to advertise for a planner to examine the proposals.

The town's Solid Waste Management Authority, which is made up of members of the Town Board, purchased the land in 1988 for $33 million for a recycling plant. That proposal died in the face of public uproar. The debt has now been refinanced up to $61 million.

The land is in the unincorporated area of the town in the jurisdiction of the Port Washington schools, police, water and sewer districts. Those agencies have petitioned for the return of the $800,000 lost each year since the town bought the property and took it off the tax rolls.

Naturalists and environmentalists say that deep in the property natural beauty proliferates in the marsh grasses and wetlands, with families of foxes and blooming tulip trees.

Local residents are torn between desires to see the land restored to the tax rolls and fears of overdevelopment. The Port Washington Chamber of Commerce is worried that stores built there might divert business from its struggling Main Street. Surrounding villages like Roslyn, alarmed over possible increases in congestion, are pleading for new access roads and proposing ideas like a bridge across the harbor or hydrofoil boats.

Mayor Howard Weitzman of Great Neck Estates, speaking for a committee of mayors from the 31 villages in the town, said they were eager to have the property sold because the carrying costs for its debt are hidden in tipping fees for garbage. "That's a budget we have no control over," Mr. Weitzman said.

The fees are stabilized for the next two years, he added, because the concessions given to the town in its trash-for-cash contract with the Town of Babylon are helping cover part of the debt.

"And," Mr. Weitzman said, "we have a commitment from Supervisor Zwirn that the cost of carrying Morewood will be taken from the Solid Waste Authority budget at that time and put onto the town tax levy. When that happens, if they haven't sold that property, general taxes go up about 50 percent."

Many civic groups have been voicing concerns about possible new access roads and the effects on property values.

Benjamin L. Zwirn, who was elected as a foe of the recycling plant, said he was in favor of "a combination of things" at the site. "We can use some housing, especially for senior citizens, and affordable housing. If commercial development can be sustained there, it would help with the tax base. We could also use some recreational facilities. I live in that area and I want to see something happen that's positive for the whole community."

Landfill for Athletics

He said the town could not afford to build a park. "If we have to go out and spend $30 million to build there," Mr. Zwirn said, "we'd add that to the $61 million debt and be $100 million in debt. How do you cover that? Parks don't generate that kind of income. We'd end up with 100 percent increase in general taxes."

On the site are two mountains of garbage and dirt, which were created after the town closed its incinerator off Shore Road in 1974. Both landfills are closed, but they have not been capped. The top of the newer one, which closed in January 1991, gives a sweeping view of the waterfront. Some developers have suggested creating ski slopes, toboggan runs, and soccer and baseball fields on the landfills.

But the executive director and acting commissioner of the waste authority, Paul Roth, said those proposals would be difficult to carry out because pipes at the former dump drain the gases from the garbage. He suggested looking at passive parks and nature trails instead.

The former incinerator, now a garbage-transfer station, looms at the rear of the property, flanked by two

Achoo! Allergy Sufferers Facing Another Shuddering Year

Pollen counts continue to run 10 to 50 times higher than normal.

By JOAN SWIRSKY

BILL BRODSKY of Great Neck is one of 400,000 Long Islanders suffering chronic seasonal allergies, and this year's pollen counts have been as bad as last year's — 10 to 50 times higher than normal. For Mr. Brodsky, a 28-year-old mechanical engineer, it has been "boom, boom, boom, boom sneezing attacks," he said.

"We're having the same kind of weather this year" as last year, said an allergy expert at the Long Island Jewish Medical Center, Dr. Vincent Bonagoura.

"Last year they were 1,000 to 6,000 per cubic meter," said Dr. Bonagoura, chief of allergy and immunology in the departments of pediatrics and medicine. "It looks like we're going to be in for it again."

Heavy rainfall encouraged the growth of ragweed, Dr. Bonagoura said, meaning that "molds have a field day."

Islanders may have a mean ragweed season in August," he added. "It's wonderful for reservoirs, but not so good for allergy sufferers."

"Allergies are always a major problem on Long Island," said Dr. Allen Kaplan, who explained that heavy rains the last two years had suppressed pollination and concentrated the pollen that finally made its late debut. "Any place that has a lot of trees and grass and is surrounded by water is going to be difficult for allergy sufferers. Climates that are damp have a high incidence of mold-spore allergies that last until the first frost and overlay the pollen season, which runs from April until July and mid-August to September."

When spring emerges, the pollen from trees and flowers is carried by the wind and finds its way into the eyes, noses and bronchial tubes, causing people to sneeze, wheeze, cough, become hoarse, sniffle, break out in hives, have puffy and watery eyes, develop eczema and sinusitis and have difficulty breathing.

Pollen is not the sole culprit. Other allergens include grass, dust mites, spores, mold, food, medications, insect bites and cat dander. The hay fever that people develop in the spring, however, is not caused by hay, nor does it produce a fever. But from August until October the ubiquitous innocent-looking yellow-flowered ragweed spews forth its pollen.

People susceptible to allergies react by producing greater-than-normal quantities of immunoglobulin E antibodies and activating monocytes and lymphocytes, other components of the immune system. Then, immunoglobulin antibodies coat the mast cells and release a cascade of chemicals into the system, including prostaglandins, leucotrienes and histamine. They are in part responsible for the typical itching, swelling and bronchial irritation.

Dr. Kaplan, the former head of allergic diseases at the National Institutes of Health, is chairman of the department of medicine and head of the Allergic Disease Center at the State University at Stony Brook. Stony Brook is the lone center on Long Island, and one of 13 in the country, that receives money for allergy research from the N.I.H. The research focuses on the molecular mechanisms of inflammation caused by allergic reactions in the nose, sinuses, skin and lungs.

Molds, Mites and Dander

"We have found a new group of molecules that are produced by the cells of the immune system and lead to accumulation of inflammatory cells within the tissues in which the allergic reaction takes place," Dr. Kaplan said. "Once this reaction has been set in motion, we have found that tissue inflammation is self-perpetuating and protracted and is responsible for the symptoms that are associated with allergic diseases.

"In an allergic reaction, where there is both sustained release of and protracted exposure to an allergen, the inflammatory response takes place and other cells of the immune system, the eosinophils and basophils, are attracted to the site of inflammation by molecules known as chemokines. They then secrete substances that cause much of the inflammation and tissue injury that is seen in allergic people."

Most doctors initially recommend avoiding the offending substance. But unless people live surrounded by concrete, pollinating plants and trees will affect them. Even the relatively non-

Long Island Q&A: Irma Schwartz

The Art of Matching Dogs and Owners

By SANDRA J. WEBER

WITH the advent of spring comes the prospect of obtaining a family or of deciding what to do with the Christmas or Hanukkah puppy that has proved too obstreperous. Despite the efforts of animal-protection organizations, many adopted or purchased pets will be passed on to new owners or end up in shelters because of their owners' unrealistic expectations.

A dog trainer from the North Shore, Irma Schwartz, has helped Suffolk County families integrate dogs into their homes and lives for years. A former administrative assistant and executive secretary, Ms. Schwartz describes herself as a lifelong dog enthusiast.

"As a child I read every book about dogs and brought home every four-legged creature I could find," she said. Ten years ago she became professionally involved with dogs, first as a veterinarian's assistant and then assisting another trainer. Eventually she started Eastwind Dog and Puppy Training, a service that offers obedience training and behavior consultation. Her two Doberman pinschers have attained advanced-obedience status in American Kennel Club-sponsored competition. Mrs. Schwartz, who was born 52 years ago in Florida, has lived in Port Jefferson for 18 years with her husband, Frank, an industrial engineer with Grumman Aerospace, and her two children.

Q. Why do people acquire pets?

A. Most people grow up with dogs and cats. They fill our need for uncritical affection. The dog, particularly, is part of the all-American image of the family unit, and it's the rare person who doesn't want one.

Q. Is there a gap between the expectations and realities of dog ownership?

A. Absolutely. Often, nostalgia about a childhood pet causes people to forget the animal's misbehavior and training problems. Some, especially first-time pet owners, don't realize the amount of effort required to channel a dog into a family's daily life. The 8-week-old puppy they brought home was fuzzy and cute. But when the dog hits puberty at 5 or 6 months 'cute' has essentially worn off. A dog nearing physical and sexual maturity may weigh two-thirds of an owner's body weight. If untrained its destructive chewing, jumping on people, bolting out of the house or yard, mounting children and soiling carpets can lead one or more family members to favor ejecting the dog from the household.

Q. What is the biggest barrier to integrating a dog into a family?

A. Time is the big crunch today. Unfortunately, many working couples find it difficult to spend time training a dog. This explains why in recent years the cat, which is less dependent and doesn't require the training of the dog, has superseded it as the most popular household pet. It was different when mom was home and could take the dog out during the day.

Q. What typically happens when people can't cope with a dog?

A. Pet professionals call it recycling. According to staff members at the Islip Town Shelter, 75 percent of puppies don't last a year in their first home. By age 2 an equal number have had three different homes.

The majority of dogs begin recycling in adolescence, when they start wreaking costly damage on their owners. I've worked with people whose dogs have destroyed a $400 pair of bifocals and chewed expensive leather shoes, sneakers and, even, grandma's heirloom afghan.

Many disgruntled dog owners try to place the animal elsewhere, but a few irresponsible ones abandon it in a shopping mall or on a country road.

Q. Are there alternatives to recycling or euthanasia?

A. Yes, several. Often a crisis such as a neighbor's complaint or a child's injury will cause an owner to seek help from a vet or dog trainer. Veterinarians can recommend good books, local obedience classes and trainers who work with individual owners or in small groups. An owner who has decided to give up a pet can try to locate someone better matched to his dog's temperament or personality. If the dog is a purebred, specialty-breed clubs can recommend a local rescue group that will help find another home. Also, nonprofit organizations like the Suffolk Obedience Training Club in Greenlawn provide ongoing obedience training and education for owners.

Q. How can prospective owners avoid those dilemmas?

A. First, before people acquire a pet, they should determine which type or breed of dog can best meet their expectations. Contrary to popular opinion, not all dogs are alike. Each breed and individual dog has different characteristics, some of which may not suit a potential owner.

For example, the terrier breeds have a high energy level. So they aren't suitable for owners who are low key and physically inactive. Members of the working breeds like the Rottweilers or Doberman pinschers are strong willed and require assertive handling. So they are not for people who are timid.

Many people want the all-American dog, either a golden or Labrador retriever, but don't realize that these dogs are require lots of exercise. The popular Lab is the Mack Truck of dogdom. It has a good temperament, but its physical strength sometimes outpowers owners. I probably train more Labs than any other breed.

Choosing a pet based on appearance alone is often disastrous, especially when the choice is impulsive or based on a fad. Many people who saw the Disney film "1,001 Dalmatians" went out and bought a Dalmatian simply because they liked its looks.

Q. Can you predict whether a dog is suitable for a given owner?

A. Professional dog breeders routinely test their puppies for temperament and suitability for specialty training. They can also provide certification that a dog's parents were free of eye and ear disorders, hip displasia, blood-clotting disorders and other hereditary problems. When you pay the high price for a purebred dog, typically $500 to $1,200, you should be getting an animal whose dam, or mother, had good prenatal care and is physically and genetically sound.

Buyers can familiarize themselves with the standard tests found in many obedience-training texts and discuss them with a breeder or, in the case of an adopted dog, with animal-shelter staff or the previous owner. Commercial pet stores, which deal in large volumes, are less likely to provide such documentation, even though they may charge as much for their dogs as an independent breeder.

Prospective owners who consider adopting an animal from a shelter should explain their previous experience with pets, family makeup and whether there are other household pets to shelter personnel. People who work in shelters say that although the most common reasons given for surrendering a pet are allergies or a family move, these are often euphemisms for behavior problems the owners couldn't handle such as excessive barking, jumping on children, biting and soiling.

Finally, knowing how a dog was socialized is important. Dogs raised in kennels where they were confined, with little human contact, generally have a hard time adjusting to family life and are often difficult to housebreak.

Q. So the source of a pet can influence the outcome?

A. Definitely. Choosing an animal with the help of a reliable supplier can help eliminate dog recycling.

The drawback of getting a dog from a shelter is that you usually can't learn much about the animal's history.

The least advisable route is to acquire a dog from a pet store, because it is usually the product of a commercial puppy mill. Due to the conditions under which they are bred such dogs may be physically or genetically unsound or may be poorly socialized, presenting owners with added expense and behavioral problems.

Buying from so-called backyard breeders, that is individuals who breed their own pet with someone else's and sell the resulting puppies, also has drawbacks. You may get a good dog or you may get one with hidden problems. On the other hand chances are better than with a pet shop that the mother dog had good prenatal care, the puppy was properly socialized, and that some attention was paid to breed standards.

Q. Is there recourse for owners who discover that their puppy is defective?

A. New York's so-called puppy lemon law protects against physical and genetic flaws. Under this legislation an owner can have a veterinarian check the puppy for heart murmurs, jaw problems and the like. If such flaws are found the vet will write them up, and the buyer can present the resulting certificate to the seller, who must give the buyer a refund or a replacement.

Professional breeders will stand behind their animals, because failure to do so jeopardizes their reputation. I was recently called in to work with an aggressive puppy. It turned out that the animal wasn't appropriate for the family, but the owners had trouble returning it to the pet store where they bought it.

Q. Are there people who shouldn't own a dog?

A. Yes. People who due either to their life style or esthetic considerations cannot meet the basic physical, emotional or financial needs of a dog, should consider a less demanding pet such as a cat or even a fish. Dogs need regular exercise. Veterinary care, which averages $50 a visit but can climb to the thousands in an emergency, and companionship.

Owners who are away from home long hours may return to find that their dog has destroyed furniture or other household objects out of boredom or loneliness. People who are so fastidious that they can't tolerate dog hair, saliva, fleas and other inevitable consequences of having an animal around the house make poor dog owners. The fact is that even well-trained animals occasionally vomit or have diarrhea or bring fleas or ticks into the house.

Q. Is there such a thing as a "bad" dog?

A. Yes, although most dogs that people label as "bad" are just misguided and untrained. It's important to know how to "read" your dog, to understand why he misbehaves and correct him. That's the purpose of obedience training.

But occasionally an animal is mentally unsound. In that case, I think, it's more humane to euthanize than abandon it, as some do, leaving it without food or shelter.

One serious mistake I see people making today is getting a puppy for protection. Instigating aggression in a young dog can be very dangerous, because when the animal reaches sexual maturity, the owner may find he can't control it.

There are some unscrupulous people on Long Island who will take a sound animal and turn it into an attack dog by treating it abusively. They'll beat it with electric prods, crate it and deny it food and water to make it vicious. Then they'll turn around and sell the animal for megabucks as a junkyard guard dog or to an overseas buyer. Frequently these are stolen dogs.

Q. What protections do owners have from pet theft?

A. Keeping a dog leashed or fenced, with a collar that has its license and an identification tag are important. Many animals that turn up in animal shelters have no identification. Because these can be lost or removed permanent tattooing provides the best protection against theft. ■

Luminary Gridlock

It was a red dot that separated the "high profiles" from the no-so-high in East Hampton last weekend. And Peggy Siegal was the keeper of the dots. As Hamptonites lined up by the side door of the East Hampton Cinema, Ms. Siegal, a well-known publicity agent from Manhattan and Wainscott, stood before them, 90 red-dot invitations clutched to her oh-so-trim body.

About 400 people had been invited to an unofficial premiere of the Neil Simon movie "Lost in Yonkers." The title seems appropriate, given that the first people to see it were in Suffolk County. "But we are not calling this a premiere," Ms. Siegal said. "It is a radio promotion."

The station being promoted was WEHM-FM, a new station in East Hampton that is partly owned by Michael (Mickey) P. Schulhof. Mr. Schulhof, who owns a house in East Hampton, is vice chairman of Sony U.S.A. Since Sony owns Columbia Pictures, which made "Lost in Yonkers," the screening was easily arranged.

"This is to say thank you to the town," said Mr. Schulhof as East Hamptonites paused to watch their neighbors — Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley, Martha Stewart, Bill Beutel, Claudia Cohen and Ron Perlman, Lee Radziwill and Herbert Ross, Anne Jackson and Eli Wallach, Yasmin Aga Kahn, Ron Delsener, Jill Rappaport, Chris Whittle, Judy Licht, Jann Wenner, Leonard Stern, Michael Kennedy and Itzhak Perlman — grab boxes of popcorn and head for their seats.

As they did, Ms. Siegal bestowed on them the coveted red dot, which offered access to a supper party later at Jerry Della Femina's so-new-the-paint-still-smelled-fresh restaurant, East Hampton Point.

Movie premieres and private screenings in the Hamptons are becoming commonplace, thanks to Ms. Siegal. "In August we'll have the premiere of 'And the Band Plays On,' " she said. "The key is to use the side door."

The side door is needed because the East Hampton Cinema is a multiplex. As the prominent lined up for "Lost in Yonkers," others lined up for "Indecent Proposal," "Dave" and "Indian Summer." Amid the mingling, photographers were trying to take pictures. But how to recognize the rich and famous? "If I don't know them," Ms. Siegal said, "then they aren't."

Watching it all were Barbara and Peter Brandenberg, who have a house in East Hampton. They had traveled to the movies to see "Dave," but now were seeing Billy and Christie. "This is worth five hours of traffic," Mrs. Brandenberg said.

"I'd like to go eat," Mr. Brandenberg said. "But I can't get her away from this."

The village police could have helped. They were out in force. " We're here for traffic control," Sgt. Matthew Bennett said. "People are dropping people off." Like Calvin and Kelly Klein? "It's not any big deal out here to see them," Sergeant Bennett said. "Everyone's used to seeing celebrities."

Bobbie Joseph of East Hampton just wanted to see a movie. "We didn't know what was playing," she said. "We thought we might see 'Dave,' but it's sold out. So we bought tickets for 'Indian Summer,' whatever that is."

When she saw the screening crowd, she wanted to join them. But, she was told, it was by invitation only. "Well, I feel a little left out," she said.

Canoe Heavyweights

Somehow it seems appropriate. Not having won a regional, or any other type, of athletic championship in decades, the Webb Institute of Naval Architecture was victorious last weekend, in concrete-canoe racing.

"Actually they came in second in the race," the institute's director of development, Ed Jaworksi, said. "But they took first place in display." That's kind of like Olympic swimmers' being judged more for their bathing suits than their backstrokes.

But, hey, Webb will take a victory anyway it can get it. The institute, which is in Glen Cove and has just 80 students, is known for academics, not athletics. Its basketball team has not won a game in more than five years, Mr. Jaworski said, adding: "It could be longer, we've lost count. The coach always says it's important the players have a good sense of humor."

Faring not much better is the school's Ultimate Frisbee team.

So hats off to the concrete-canoe team — Joe Corvelli of Smithtown; Nick Jadamec of Mystic, Conn., and Spencer Johnson of Oswego. They built the canoe as their senior thesis project. "The seniors are all excited," Mr. Jaworksi said. "They say this could be the first senior thesis that actually worked."

Another senior, Erik Nilsson, rowed the race with Mr. Corvelli. The competition, in Eisenhower Park, was sponsored by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and organized by the Nassau Community College Concrete Canoe Club.

Webb does not have a concrete-canoe club. "Nobody was even in one until they built this," Mr. Jaworksi said. The canoe weighs 115 pounds and is made of recycled incinerator ash. The students named it Kiss My Ash. Well, it is spring.

Villagewide Garage Sale

Sea Cliff will be on sale next Saturday. Unless it rains. Then Sea Cliff will be on sale next Sunday, because nobody wants to buy a soggy village, no matter what the cause.

To raise money for a new ambulance, Sea Cliff is holding a garage-sale extravaganza. "At least half the families in Sea Cliff are involved in this," said Ernie Robitel, chairman of the sale. It was Mr. Robitel who thought up the idea of raising money by having residents hold garage sales and the village print up a guide listing where the garages were and what was being sold in them.

On Saturday morning shoppers can pick up the guide in Clifton Park, the village square. "We'll sell them for $5 each," Mr. Robitel said. "That's how we'll make most of our money."

At least 70 sales will be listed, with many of them combining several garages. "The Sea Cliff Yacht Club is holding a garage sale," Mr. Robitel said. "And they've got 50 families' donating stuff. And there's the Methodist Church garage sale and a block-party garage sale.

How many semiworking toasters can one community sell? If everybody plugged in at once, Sea Cliff might black out Nassau County.

The sales run from 9 to 4, which presents another problem. How to keep the early bird shoppers out of Sea Cliff. "We're not going to close down all the roads," Mr. Robitel said. "But the houses are going to put up red balloons, and they are not supposed to go up until 9." Homeowners paid $20 for the red balloon and a mention in the shoppers' guide.

Counterfeit red balloons or garage sales will not be tolerated. "We have garage-sale section captains," Mr. Robitel said. "If they find a garage sale not listed, they'll say, 'Wouldn't' you like to make a donation?' " In cash. Mr. Robitel has seen enough toasters. ■

Allergy Sufferers' Shuddering Year

Michael Shavel for The New York Times

Dr. Vincent Bonagoura, an allergy expert at the Long Island Jewish Medical Center, with a pollen counter, Martha Ramos, on the roof of the hospital.

allergenic environment of an air-conditioned office or home is not necessarily a refuge, although it is recommended. Molds from air-conditioners and humidifiers, as well as dust mites and dander, can send an allergic person into fits of discomfort.

Mr. Brodsky, who is also a volunteer firefighter in Great Neck, said he usually took a prescription medication, but that it had become so expensive that he would buy over-the-counter medication this year. "It zombies you out, but it does prevent the attacks," he said. "Or maybe it just makes me too tired to sneeze."

Drugs can alleviate many symptoms. Antihistamines, sold by brand name and generically, are the drugs most frequently used to combat the histamine reaction. But in the past the side effect of drowsiness prohibited many people from functioning at full capacity or driving. In recent years nonsedating antihistamines have become popular. But last year the Food and Drug Administration warned that in some people they can cause irregular heartbeats when used with certain drugs or taken to excess.

Other remedies include decongestants, steroid nasal sprays, steroid inhalers and bronchodilaters for asthma and cromolyn sodium, an anti-inflammatory drug.

Counts Every 10 Minutes

On the roof of Long Island Jewish Medical Center, a rotor-rod air sampler takes counts of pollen and mold spores every 10 minutes. The sampling, developed by Dr. William Nicholas 20 years ago, is currently giving spring measurements but also includes samples from the fall through the first frost. The count is available from (718) 470-4610.

A new group of molecules leads to inflammations and other reactions.

Help With an Endoscope

To treat the chronic symptoms of sinus infections that do not respond to conventional treatments, Dr. Neil Hammerman and his associates, Drs. David Abraham and Louis Rosner at South Shore Otolaryngology in Rockville Centre, use an endoscope, a thin telescopelike instrument that beams light.

"With increasing allergy exposure," Dr. Hammerman said, "more people are susceptible to sinus infections. Treating them is not as complicated as it used to be, and with this instrument there are no incisions, and people can go home the same day."

Dr. Hammerman, an attending physician at the Mercy Medical Center, said when allergic inflammation occurs, the tissues block the opening and can lead to sinusitis, headaches, breathing difficulty, infection and increased susceptibility to polyps. "For those who can't get relief over a period of time this is a less radical approach," he said.

Many people obtain relief from vaccinations.

In testing for allergies specialists inject small quantities of allergens under the skin or apply them in scratch tests to the back or arm. An allergic person will react with swelling or redness. The offending substance is administered as a vaccine made up of an extract of that allergen and administered over years.

The patient's system is eventually desensitized to the allergen. "In 80 percent of cases," Dr. Bonagoura said, "allergy shots bring about either a cure or a significant improvement for allergy sufferers."

"I don't have to watch TV to know it's the allergy season," Elana Hayden, a singer from Fresh Meadows, said. "If something is pollinating anywhere in the tristate area I know."

Ms. Hayden said an entire shelf in her medicine cabinet, "a big shelf," was devoted to antihistamines, bronchodilaters, nasal sprays, eye drops, decongestants and even codeine. She said she once needed that drug when she pulled a muscle "because the tickle in my throat made me cough so hard."

"When I'm really desperate," she added, "I have to get into a hot shower, so the steam can clear my nasal passages.

"The worst thing about allergies is that they can come out of nowhere. You can go to sleep feeling fine and wake up feeling like you were hit by a Mack truck."

Ms. Hayden said that her career made it necessary for her to be "in top form vocally," and that when allergies strike, "your whole system is affected."

"My eyes are puffy, my throat feels like I have a strep, my chest feels like I have TB and I start to make those terrible noises like snorts and clicks that we allergy people are known for.

"I'm a cat lover, and I have two cats. So I know what President Clinton feels like, because we both know we should get rid of our cats. I know that Socks must make his allergies act up. But there's no way I'd do that, and neither would he. At least when I'm sneezing and wheezing I know I'm in good company now that even the President of the United States has put allergies on the map."

Mr. Brodsky is not so sanguine. "The only solution," he said, "is to find an island somewhere and move." ■

Pine Barrens Plan Shifts Alliances

By JOHN RATHER

Environmentalists and builders move closer together.

So crowded with public and private planners is Long Island that when the Long Island Regional Planning Board approved two major initiatives last month the votes seemed to be just a part of even more sweeping events.

As builders, environmentalists and public officials vie for their plans in discussions occurring largely behind closed doors, the preservation of the pine barrens and the future of the East End are at stake.

In two steps, the six-member regional planning board, a two-county agency, voted to accept a $486,000 study paid by the Federal Aviation Administration on joint civilian and military use of the Navy's Calverton airport. The study supported building an industrial park and up to four cargo flights a day at the 6,000-acre site where the Grumman Corporation assembles and tests jets.

At the meeting the board also gave final approval to a plan to protect ground water. The approval is the culmination of an effort to comply with a 1987 state law to protect aquifers that are the Island's sole source of drinking water. The plan sets out details for guarding ground water from degradation in nine critical watersheds, the largest of which is an expanse of pine barrens.

The executive director of the board, Lee E. Koppelman, who has been the dominant planner on the Island, depicted the water plan and its recommendation for five-acre zoning in the nine areas as the most thorough blueprint for water protection that has been devised. He asserted that building a major industrial park in the midst of the largest area could be accomplished without harming the water.

Split With Koppelman

But even as State of Environmental Conservation Commissioner Thomas C. Jorling certified the water plan as complete, developers and environmentalists joined in depicting it as insufficient to settle how development should proceed in the 100,000 remaining acres of pine barrens.

What is still urgently needed, they said, is a binding plan administered by a state agency that would delineate areas for building and areas where it would be barred.

In a split between Mr. Koppelman and the critics, Mr. Koppelman has insisted that no state agency is needed. He has also predicted that there would be no chance that the Legislature would approve such an agency.

The opponents assert that Mr. Koppelman has become an impediment to a binding development plan. People close to the dispute said last week that it appeared that County Executive Robert J. Gaffney faced a choice between Mr. Koppelman and an unlikely grouping of builders, environmentalists and town officials favoring a binding plan.

The New York Times

Lee E. Koppelman

The president of the Long Island Association, James L. Larocca, has initiated discussions, and people involved with the issue said the group was near agreement on a map to bar building on half the 100,000 acres.

The participants in the mapping include the Long Island Builders Institute; major builders, environmental groups including the Long Island Pine Barrens Society, the Group for the South Fork and the Nature Conservancy, and the supervisors of Riverhead, Southampton and Brookhaven. Former County Executive Michael A. LoGrande, a planner and executive director of the Long Island Water Authority, is also taking an increasingly active role, participants said.

Requirement for Legislative Action

People involved in the discussions say efforts are afoot to seek legislation before the Legislature adjourns to put into effect a map and form an agency to regulate building in the pine barrens. Assemblyman Thomas DiNapoli, Democrat of Great Neck, and State Senator Kenneth P. LaValle, Republican of Port Jefferson, were said to be awaiting agreement on a bill that they could introduce.

The executive director of the builders' institute, Edwin M. Schwenk, said builders would agree to a plan excluding building forever from a large part of the barrens in exchange for certainties that they could build on other parts. He added that without such a plan builders faced legal challenges to their plans.

The executive director of the pine barrens society, Richard L. Amper Jr., said any acceptable plan would have to assure that the cumulative effects of development did not degrade the water. He said a goal of his group was to compel a study of the cumulative effects before building proceeds.

Mr. Koppelman has not participated in the talks among the developers, environmentalists and public officials, participants said.

The Nature Conservancy and the Regional Plan Association of Manhattan, a private group, have started preservation efforts. The executive director of the Long Island and the South Fork-Shelter Island chapters of the Nature Conservancy, Sara Davison, said the group had identified a 47,000-acre core of the barrens it would seek to protect. The conservancy says it views protection of the core area through government action and land purchase as part of an initiative to protect the Peconic Bioreserve, its designation for a region that includes the pine barrens and the five East End towns.

The core includes the Calverton airport. "Residential and commercial and industrial development is not conducive to protecting the fire regime or the water regime of the pine barrens," said Ms. Davison.

In a parallel initiative, the Regional Plan Association has begun a pine barrens project that seeks to break the deadlock between builders and environmentalists. Using innovative zoning techniques that allow development but maximize open land, the association is also seeking a role in future development in the East End towns.

The executive director of the group, Robert Yarrow, said, "We need some new templates." ■

Photographs by Steve Berman for The New York Times

By CATHY SINGER

On the Job With
Dr. Sanford Glantz

"FEEL like a million bucks?" Dr. Sanford Glantz asked a 30-year-old who had been taken to the hospital an hour earlier after fainting in his dentist's office.

The man, in better shape, answered, "Yes."

"So, can I cash you in?" Dr. Glantz said.

The man's face brightened.

"It's always the same five jokes," Dr. Glantz said. "But at least it makes them smile a bit."

Those five jokes, as well as his several Mickey Mouse tie clasps, are a big part of the reason why Dr. Glantz, known to family and friends as Sandy, was promoted last year to director of the emergency department at Huntington Hospital, the largest hospital in the Huntington region. Its emergency room treats more than 39,000 cases a year.

Dr. Glantz, 37, had the right qualifications, of course, but it was also his easygoing nature and sensitive and jovial bedside manner that he extends to co-workers, as well as patients, that made him boss of the E.R. Dr. Glantz entered the field 10 years ago, when physicians in emergency rooms were still the Rodney Dangerfields of medicine. They got little, or no, respect not only from other physicians, but also from the public.

But the field was already changing from one populated by many residents, semiretired doctors and those not able to succeed in their chosen fields to high-quality board-certified physicians trained in emergency medicine. E.R.'s were moving from being subsections with little authority to full departments with real power.

"While I still get asked sometimes when I'm getting a real job," said Dr. Glantz, who works 10-to-12-hour shifts three of every six days, "this has become one of the hottest residencies now."

"We're no longer low man on the totem pole," he said. "It is also one field where doctors don't have to wear beepers or be on call. And I get plenty of vacation, six weeks a year."

Dr. Glantz had originally wanted to be a surgeon, but he grew to love the action, variety and times when seconds count and the adrenalin surges in emergency medicine. "I wouldn't do anything else," said Dr. Glantz, whose face is lightly freckled and whose brown hair is beginning to gray. "I don't know how private doctors do it. I'd be bored to tears."

In emergency medicine, doctors have to know something about everything, he said. In one day he might have to treat a head injury, stabilize a heart-attack victim, set broken bones and deliver a baby on a car seat.

"But every time I get cocky enough to think I can handle everything," Dr. Glantz said, "something comes through the door that we don't understand. It keeps me studying."

Dr. Glantz's days vary dramatically. Sometimes, business is slow, and just a few of the 22 beds are occupied.

'We're Very Superstitious'

Sometimes the ambulances never stop arriving. Like that cold winter night in 1990, when an Avianca jet crashed a few miles west of the hospital, sending a stream of ambulances, carrying 11 trauma victims, five of them children. Or when the Walt Whitman Mall fire in 1991 sent to the hospital 22 smoke-inhalation victims and one burn victim, who later died.

"We're very superstitious," Dr. Glantz said. "We follow the moon. Actually, Mondays after holidays are usually bad, and summer is worse than winter, because weekend warriors are some of our best business. And beer and lawn mowers are a terrible combination. We had a guy in here who ran over his foot with one. He had a Meisterbrau in one hand and a lawn mower in the other. True story."

Three women arrived in the emergency room in one month, each complaining of unspecified abdominal pain and each in labor. "One of the women even had other children," Dr. Glantz recalled. "Now that's real denial, when you are in labor and don't even know you're pregnant."

On a recent Monday, which was slow, Dr. Glantz was tending a man who had a grand mal seizure at a friend's house and was taken by ambulance. The man, who had a history of seizures, was using medication to control them, but had forgotten to take it that morning or even for a few days. It was difficult for Dr. Glantz to get a straight story. He hears lies daily, he said, but he does not grow angry, because patients usually lie out of embarrassment.

Huntington Hospital does not treat the same populations as many urban hospitals, but the community has changed dramatically in 20 years.

"Long Island is no longer a bedroom community, where everyone is a homeowner with a two-car garage and 2.4 kids," said Dr. Glantz, who grew up in Rosedale and earned his B.S. in chemistry at the State University at Stony Brook in 1977. "Now we have the Saturday night knife-and-gun club. We get slashings and knifings and shootings. Not as much as Lincoln Hospital in the Bronx, but we get our fair share, if there is such a thing as a fair share."

Just after noon on that Monday, a young man accompanied his 12-year-old cousin, who had an earache. After a quick look at the boy's ears and throat, Dr. Glantz found the problem. The right ear was bright red, a sure sign of an infection. Dr. Glantz told the boy about the eardrops and bubble-gum-tasting antibiotic that he would prescribe and shook his hand, but he gave no hint to the youth or his cousin that children's ear infections belong in a pediatrician's office, not in an emergency room.

Dr. Glantz was well aware that the boy, like an increasing number of people in the region, is in the Medicaid program. In the Huntington region, he said, there are virtually no physicians who treat Medicaid patients, because of the paperwork.

"The nearest clinic that takes Medicaid is pretty far away, in Wyandanch," he said. "And they are so swamped that this boy probably would not have been given an appointment until next week. Others have no health insurance at all. We're the safety net here. No one is turned away, which is one of the beauties of emergency medicine. I can treat everyone equally, from the homeless to someone from Lloyd Harbor who pulls up in a Rolls- Royce."

Suddenly a mother carrying a baby who was bleeding from the head rushed in. The woman explained that her car had skidded in Dix Hills and hit a tree. The windows on the driver's side shattered, and the baby, Jake, was in his car seat at the time. "Well, that's good," Dr. Glantz said. "Now let's take a look at him."

As the mother let go, Jake began to cry. A nurse took off his diaper, which had glass shards in it. The mother winced and kissed the baby, who was five days away from his 1st birthday. She, too, started to cry. "He may have just been hit by some flying glass," Dr. Glantz said. "And that would be good."

He held a pen in front of Jake's face and told him to watch the rocket ship. "See it come out of mommy's ear," he said, as he checked the baby's pupils to see whether his brain was functioning properly. "Kids respond better when I act like a silly uncle."

An hour later Dr. Glantz was looking at X-rays of Jake's head and chest. "Looks good," he said. "Now I get to reassure the mom. That's what I like to do." Her son needed several stitches. But before Dr. Glantz could sew the cuts on Jake's forehead he had to perform another operation, something that he called "a parentectomy," or removing the parent from the room. "I have always found that the child does better when the parent is not in the room," he said.

With a large bright light overhead, Dr. Glantz put Jake in a blue papoose, which the baby did not like. Jake began to cry. "I'm sorry, Pumpkin," Dr. Glantz cooed. He injected a local anesthetic, checked for glass in the wounds and began stitching with a tiny curved needle. "This is where the art of medicine comes in," he said, as he sewed nine tiny stitches across two small cuts. He cleaned the baby's head, which was red from numerous scrapes, and dabbed bacitracin on the area. "So do you hate me?" Dr. Glantz asked as he took Jake out of the papoose. Jake stopped crying.

"Now we're buddies?" Dr. Glantz asked. "Give me five! Two and a half?" Dr. Glantz carried Jake to his mother, singing to him all the way. ■

THE NEWEST MÖBEN KITCHEN FROM EUROPE—AT 40% OFF.

Introducing the "Georgian." Sleek, contemporary, perhaps our finest expression of European cabinet-making.

If anyone still thinks a white kitchen is plain vanilla, Möben's new "Georgian" will put that notion to rest forever. It has a sleek elegance, a purity of design, that characterizes the best of contemporary European styling.

It is the new top-of-the-line Möben Kitchen. And to introduce it properly to America, we offer it to you – for a limited time – at a handsome reduction.

Custom-designed – with European expertise

Needless to say, each "Georgian" kitchen is custom-designed for your particular needs and lifestyle. Our expert design consultant makes a personal visit to your home, to create a thoroughly functional and livable layout.

Every cabinet and countertop is made with keen European workmanship. Yet, because Möben imports and sells directly, our kitchens are kept well within your means.

Rivalries Erupt Over Tourism Tax

Mr. Scheetz said. "We wanted to form our own organization to promote the leisure-time resort business. Each area feels it has something different to offer."

Mr. Rudzinski, who is also on the board of the visitors' bureau, insisted that none of the bureau's advertising was for "group business, but for tourism."

"Show me one ad that says, 'Bring your convention to Long Island,' " he said. "It doesn't exist."

'All of the Points We Want to Make'

The administrator of the Stony Brook Community Fund, Gloria D. Rocchio, said, "A generic ad could never get in all of the points we want to make, and therefore it wouldn't be as effective."

But George G. Dempster of Cove Neck, former State Commerce Commissioner and chairman of the Transleisure Corporation in Woodbury, said the I ♡ New York campaign had demonstrated that a unified approach could work effectively.

"I think one of the important characteristics of advertising is to produce a critical mass," Mr. Dempster said. "Mass is the amount you can spend on advertising. Below a certain level your message is imperceptible. When I took office, $2 million was being spent on the I Love New York campaign. Once I jumped it to $11 million the intensity and repetition of the campaign increased its penetration in the marketplace."

Some critics say a regional approach can truly be competitive.

"All of these individual campaigns were run by local areas under the repetitive rubric of I Love New York," Mr. Dempster said. "So I think there is a substantial benefit to a collective approach. No one community has enough spending power to get a critical mass. And therefore they can't get the repetition that is a critical ingredient."

Mrs. Rocchio asserted that the repetition that Mr. Dempster advocates was in her ads because they all have the words "Long Island" at the bottom. She said they had the name of the Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau and a telephone number, (800) 441-4601, for additional information.

"We found through focus groups that visitors to Long Island knew only about the Montauk Lighthouse and the Hamptons and, mostly, Southampton," she said. "So these ads start to familiarize people with what other parts of Long Island have to offer."

About 65 percent of the visitors to the South Fork are from Nassau County, and the rest are predominantly from New York City, according to Mr. Scheetz. He said his organization, formed in the spring of 1991, is made up of chambers of commerce in Westhampton, East Quogue, Hampton Bays, Southampton, Sag Harbor, East Hampton and Montauk.

"We felt that forming this group could enhance the promotion of the South Fork and establish a spirit of cooperation between all of the chambers," he said.

The ad, Mr. Scheetz said, stresses that the Hamptons have "1,100 miles of beaches, 4,000 accommodation facilities, the finest restaurants in the world and the renowned Hamptons nightlife, sport fishing, sky diving and museums."

Sources of Financing

The Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau paid for 70 percent of the ad using the room-tax money, and Mr. Scheetz said his group paid the rest. Its budget comes from $5,000 each from Southampton Town and East Hampton.

In addition, each chamber pays dues that total $5,000. An additional $3,000 is raised from private sources, and the state's I Love New York campaign contributes $5,000 in 50-50 matching funds. Unlike the funds from the visitors' bureau, however, ads taken out with state money have to appear outside Long Island.

"This is our first year running ads," Mr. Scheetz said. "We hope to double our budget next year, when we get more room-tax money."

In addition to newspaper advertising, Mr. Scheetz said, his group plans radio commercials on stations in Connecticut and Westchester.

"We're trying to overcome the bad publicity about damaged beaches,"

Mr. Scheetz added. "You'd think from watching the news that all the beaches were destroyed, and they were not. The vast majority of the beaches are O.K."

The president of the Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau, Mr. Davidson, said he did not agree with Mr. Scheetz's assessment of public opinion. "I don't think the perception is as strong as they think it is," Mr. Davidson said. "But it is not my restaurant or hotel, and if they want that advertising, we'll help support it."

'Most People Are Panicking'

The president of the Fire Island Tourism Bureau, Warren C. McDowell, agreed with Mr. Scheetz. He said his bureau had received three times the number of calls last year on its information line, 563-8448.

"Most people are panicking that they won't be able to swim in the Hamptons this summer, so they are trying to get to Fire Island," he said. "We have 33 miles of beach, and it is in excellent shape."

To help spread the word about Fire Island, the bureau is supporting a campaign paid for in part by the Holiday Inn at MacArthur Airport, the Fire Island Tourism Bureau and a ferry service to Fire Island. The ads invite tourists to buy a package at the hotel that includes ferry service to Fire Island.

Mr. McDowell, who is also publisher of The Fire Island Tide, said such focused advertising was necessary because Fire Island is not part of the Long Island mainland, and ads "promoting the Hamptons and the wine areas don't help us."

The North Fork wineries are promoted by the Southold Town Promotion Committee, which represents three chambers of commerce, Greenport-Southold, Cutchogue-New Suffolk and Mattituck. The president of the committee, Richard J. Noncarrow, said the group took out a full-page ad in a New England travel guide reminding visitors not to forget their glasses — sunglasses, wine glasses, field glasses and Mason jars.

Seventy-percent of the ad was paid for by Mr. Davidson's visitors' bureau. That 10-year-old group paid for the rest from the $15,000 it received from Southold Town.

"You can't do a lot with $15,000, but we can increase it with the Long Island Convention and Visitors Bureau's matching funds," he said.

The Stony Brook Community Fund, a privately financed organization, bought a full-page ad in the same guide. The ad stressed attractions like the Three Village Inn, the Museums at Stony Brook, the harbor, the Great Mall and the Stony Brook Village Center. Mr. Davidson said he believed that all the "subregional" ads were helpful in promoting Long Island and much more successful than the "little box ads saying come to Montauk or Southampton."

Lobbying in Nassau

The Nassau County Board of Supervisors has not adopted a room tax, although virtually all the hotels in the county are "lobbying hard for it, so we, too, can start promoting ourselves," Mr. Rudzinski said.

But he said he doubted that the tax would be adopted before the November elections, because "nobody wants to use the word 'tax' now, even though the tax won't be on the locals, but the out-of-towners and will attract business to the county."

He said Cape Cod and Virginia Beach had a "great summer last year, even though they had the same weather we had, because they were advertising in our own backyard."

"I'm positive that helped them," Mr. Rudzinski said. "And our beaches are just as nice, if not better. Our North Fork looks like New England, and the South Fork looks like Ocean City, N.J., or the Delaware beaches. We need those tourist dollars."

Mr. Rudzinski, who has lived on Long Island for 18 months, said ads promoting the Island were particularly important because the region had a "bad connotation" elsewhere in the country. "People don't look at Long Island as a place to visit," he said.

That is why he said he was particularly upset to see an ad promoting the North Fork that had a map of Long Island with the Nassau end rolled up in a tube. "We're trying to do business in Nassau, and that ad encourages people to just drive on through," Mr. Rudzinski said.

Nassau gave the visitors' bureau $70,000 this year. Mr. Davidson said $32,000 of that was for salaries, $8,000 for the mailings and the rest for marketing. He said that although the bureau would not run advertisements specifically promoting Nassau, it published a calendar of Nassau events and worked with the Friends of Long Island Heritage to promote attractions like the Sands Point Preserve and the Cradle of Aviation Museum in Mitchel Park. ■

Special School Caught In a Labor Dispute

By THOMAS GLAVIN

DESPITE recent statewide interest, a strike by teachers and teachers' aides at a small private school in Huntington is in its fifth month, and participants say it shows no signs of being resolved soon.

The school, Madonna Heights, a Roman Catholic institution for troubled teen-age women, is run by the Sisters of the Good Shepherd and affiliated with the Diocese of Rockville Centre. In January, 23 of the 28-member teaching staff set up picket lines.

Negotiations have broken down, and the New York State Union of Teachers, which represents the staff, has filed charges with the State Employee Relations Board alleging unfair labor practices by the school's administration.

Both Sides Are Adamant

"The school has taken a totally intransigent position, and there has been no weakening on either side," Dan Bahr, a labor relations specialist at the union office in Hauppauge, said. "It's been very frustrating for us and for those 23 people, who have been out there in all kinds of weather for five months and have been told basically that they no longer have jobs."

Although teachers at Madonna Heights can earn a maximum of $31,000 a year and aides earn as little as $10,000, the dispute is not about salaries, but about health benefits.

Mr. Bahr said that when negotiations for a new contract began last May the school insisted on the right to change health coverage at any point during the contract. The staff feared that such a stipulation would eventually result in reduced coverage.

"All of the staff are women," Mr. Bahr said, "and some are single parents. So with already meager salaries it would be impossible for them to pay more out of pocket than they already do. And there's concern that if they cave in on this issue, other things could be taken from them. I don't know of any union that would accept such a provision in a contract."

Negotiations continued after the old contract expired in August. But on Dec. 24 the school informed the teachers and aides that their medical coverage was being reduced. Three weeks later, they went on strike.

According to Mr. Bahr, the teachers and aides were notified in March that they had been permanently replaced.

Other Services for Young People

Sister Thomas More, a psychologist at the school and a member of the contract negotiation team, said that the administration was acting on principle. In addition to the school, Madonna Heights Services operates other educational and social programs, mostly for homeless teenagers and young women with children. The organization employs a total of 246 people.

The teachers and aides at the school are the sole unionized employees.

"The union wants the right to negotiate every component of a plan that covers everyone and, in effect, wants veto power over a plan that is shared by over 220 other workers," Sister More said. "We feel we can't do that. It wouldn't be fair to our other employees to put them in the position of being controlled by only two dozen people."

Sister More said that the administration's top priority was to serve the teen-agers at the school. Although the strike has had some effects on services, she said, the school has continued to operate "thanks to a core group of substitute teachers who have been with us since January" and teachers who chose to continue working.

"There's a state mediator involved now, and we're willing to go back to the negotiating table," she added.

Hearing on Replacements

At hearing on April 22 in Hauppauge, State Senator James J. Lack, Republican of Hauppauge, was the co-chairman of the third in a series of statewide sessions on replacement workers, with the Madonna Heights walkout receiving intense attention.

"The money value in dispute isn't that much, so it's a shame that the girls at Madonna Heights aren't receiving the services they should because of this kind of fracas," Mr. Lack said. "On the other hand I don't know of any labor contract that allows the employer to unilaterally change health coverage without negotiating with the union. If this strike drags on it wouldn't surprise me if more attention is given to this issue."

Helping From Colleagues

Teachers in nearby communities are apparently becoming involved in the dispute. The president of the Sayville Teachers Association, Ron Smith, said his members had donated money to the strikers.

"We're trying to help colleagues in difficulty," he said. "There's a growing concern that this dispute is an effort to break the Madonna Heights union. If it happens there it can happen elsewhere."

The head of the Madonna Heights local, Mary Loughlin, addressed a statewide convention in Buffalo last weekend.

"We passed the hat around and raised money to help these courageous women, and we're having teachers from surrounding districts join the picket line," Mr. Bahr said. "We're hoping the state hearing applied some pressure on Madonna Heights. Otherwise it's just dig in our heels.'

Sister More said the school was also prepared to endure what may be an even longer strike. "It's distracting when we're trying to focus on helping people who have so little," she said. "There are hundreds of other employees who aren't striking. We feel we can't accommodate the wishes of just a few employees." ■ industrial parks. Houses are atop 150-foot cliffs and slopes at the northern and western edges.

A man-made 70-foot cliff that dominates one area has been a backdrop for western movies and television commercials needing moonscapes.

The Village of Flower Hill abuts the southwestern tip of the property. The neighborhood of Beacon Hill is to the northwest, and the Port Washington business district is half-mile away.

Immediately to the north are 250 acres of undeveloped county park land. Many proposals for Morewood include the county land and the 135-acre landfill. The plans are linked with the county's Harbor Beach Park and the town's Bar Beach, for a package of more than 830 acres, which is the size of Central Park in Manhattan.

Using county land would have to be negotiated with the county, and changing the use of the park land would require approval from the State Legislature.

Any proposal would have to be consistent with the town's waterfront revitalization, which has removed more than 100 abandoned barges from the harbor.

Maxine Hicks for The New York Times

The dilapidated sand-washing tower on Hempstead Harbor in Port Washington.

Beautiful Side of the Site

Mike Shodell, president of Residents for a More Beautiful Port Washington, an environmental group, said most people driving by Morewood did not see its beauty.

"What you see from the road is tortuous," Mr. Shodell said. "It's not until you get back into the property that you're aware of its beauty. It reminds me of when Olmstead did Central Park, which is a completely artificial park. All the elements that he tried to get into that park are being presented here. It pales in dramatic impact with this, which is totally natural."

Mr. Shodell said he thought Morewood could be developed into something "much more magnificent than Central Park."

"Because of the unique and spectacular nature of this large area," he said, "we would very much like to see all of it, if possible, preserved as park land and open space. But the question of finances arises, and that has to be worked out."

Tim Nissen, now an architect in Manhattan, was a youngster when he played in the sand pits. His group, the Cow Neck Partnership, wants to establish a partnership between public and private concerns, and it suggests that the town retain financial control until all rezoning and planning has been completed.

Mr. Nissen proposed compact development, enabling building, utilities and investment on a smaller scale. "It also allows more land to remain open for public use as park, recreation and wildlife refuge," he said. "Our package offers the town community-participation workshops, planning and financial services. The fate of this property is one of the most important issues the town has faced in years. The land is beautiful and of tremendous environmental interest."

Mayor John Walter Flower Hill, the largest incorporated village on the peninsula, said the greatest problem with developing Morewood was noncooperation. Flower Hill, with its 1,400 houses and 4,500 residents, is adjacent to the landfill.

"The Morewood property has been a bone of contention between the town and surrounding neighborhoods and villages since it was purchased by the town," said Mr. Walter. "Ben Zwirn is working hard to do something with it. But he shouldn't be doing it alone. What happens to that property should be a community decision. We should be included in all the details. That land was raped once, when they put a landfill on it. Let's not rape it again with a decision that doesn't include the community. Ben got where he is with community support. Don't put us off now like we were farmers who don't understand the problem."

Overburdened Arteries

Mr. Zwirn and others agree that traffic is the most critical issue. The site is four miles from the Long Island Expressway and the Northern State Parkway and one mile from Northern Boulevard. The main connecting link is two-lane Roslyn Road. Searingtown and Glen Cove Roads, both very heavily traveled, are the other two arteries in the area.

The president of the Beacon Hill Residents Association, George Curth, said: "The traffic comes from Shore Road into Beacon Hill. Any major development that would bring in more traffic would concern us. And, of course, it would also increase the traffic in downtown Port Washington, which is pretty bad already."

For Mayor Joel Pasnik of Roslyn, the perfect solution to the traffic problem would be putting a national cemetery in Morewood, a proposal that he has advocated for years.

Aside from that, he said, there are two choices for traffic relief, a bridge from Morewood over Hempstead Harbor or directing it up the hill to Port Washington Boulevard.

"Anything at all so traffic doesn't have the exit under the Northern Boulevard viaduct into Roslyn," Mr. Pasnik said. "That's what happens now. We already are the crossroads for every garbage truck running to the transfer station. Any development planned there would just add to it."

Golf courses would be fine, he said, because traffic is spread out during the day. "I don't care how they do it," he added. "But whatever they do, it has to give us traffic relief. An exit into the viaduct without coming into our village might work.

"I also suggested that the town take the land they own that abuts Mount Trashmore, behind the North Hempstead Golf Course and give the course enough for two holes in exchange for running a road through the golf course to exit on Port Washington Boulevard. There is already a service road there they could possibly build on."

Fears in East Hills and North Hills

If the Morewood development coincides with the expansion of the Long Island Expressway between Exits 30 and 40, which is projected for 1995 to 1997, East Hills will feel the impact, said Mayor Lawrence Aaronson, who added:

"We're right there between those two exits, and it's a very narrow corridor. When people see construction they look for alternative routes. That's us."

Mayor John Lentini of North Hills wrote in a letter to 4,200 constituents:

"This area is already overburdened with traffic congestion at peak hours. Combine that with any development at Morewood and the L.I.E. expansion project, and we must conclude the traffic congestion, noise and air-pollution levels generated will be unacceptable to our residents."

Despite the objections, Mr. Lentini said later, he does not oppose the Morewood proposal. "It's for the health and stability of the town," he said. "We have to sell that property."

He offered an idea for the development, to build a hotel in the shape of lighthouse to symbolize the Island and create a waterfront community similar to the Mystic Seaport. "It would revitalize the area," Mr. Lentini said, "and build on our heritage." ■

Port Washington Public Library, 1910

The Sand That Built New York City

IMMIGRANT laborers began carving sand from the property now known as Morewood in 1865. Trains and conveyor belts carried the sand over Shore Road to scows in Hempstead Harbor. For more than 100 years, more than 120 million tons of the famous Cow Neck sand was mined, providing building material for subways, skyscrapers, sidewalks and bridges in New York City.

The workers, whose families were housed in the sand pits, earned an average of $1.50 a day and were often victims of cave-ins or maimed by barge or machinery accidents. When a group of 150 Italian miners struck in 1908 for a 25-cent-a-day raise they were arrested, fined and dismissed.

The mining peaked in 1912, when scows loaded 30 to 50 tons of sand a day. It ended completely at Morewood in the mid-80's. The desolation remains, however, studded with bits of abandoned conveyor belts and machinery. The remnants of a sand-washing tower still punctuate the skyline.

Tim Nissen of the Cow Neck Parnership played in the sand pits after he moved to Port Washington from San Francisco when he was in the fourth grade.

"All the kids in Port Washington who wanted to go in there did so, even though you weren't supposed to," he recalled. "I loved being able to walk in the woods in the stand of tulip trees. We'd go bounding down those beautiful white cliffs and have a whole day to track in the summertime.

"I retrieved some mollusks way up above sea level from some of the clay. It was always a place where I could escape. There were wildflowers and huge fields of fern and jack-in-the-pulpits. There was a very old forest feeling, and yet you'd have the contrasts of the various colored sands." ■

Golf Courses, Marina, Stores and a U.N. Campus

The proposals for Morewood:

The Muss Development Corporation of Forest Hills wants to attract the Professional Golfers of America tour with a Tournament Players Club course. Eugene Holloway, general manager of Potomac Investment Associates of Gaithersburg, Md., which represents the P.G.A. tour, said: "We are very happy with the components offered there. It's a beautiful site."

Mordecai Weinstein, project coordinator for Muss, which reportedly offered $50 million for the property two years ago, said the plan included 800,000 feet of commercial and industrial space, houses and a retail area, plus a marina and a park.

"The pristine area of the site should be left as it is," Mr. Weinstein said. "We're very willing to work with the environmentalists. We like to feel that we are the most serious, probable and possible contender. Let's face it, the solution to this does not have to be political."

Wilbur Breslin of the Breslin Realty Development Corporation of Garden City proposes two golf courses, a professional tennis complex and a 400-slip marina, plus commuter ferries to Manhattan. A retail area would feature a fashion center with a price level "a niche below" the Americana Shopping Center in Manhasset. Another part would be aimed at tourists and members of discount clubs. About 79 percent of the property would remain open. Mr. Breslin proposes 146 residential acres in four neighborhoods, three of which would be surrounded by golf courses. Also included is a 14-screen cinema and areas for live theater, restaurants and catering.

Guyco Enterprises Ltd. of Roslyn Heights, working as a partnership with others, suggests a 250-room semiresidential hotel geared toward the elderly, a conference center, two 18-hole golf courses, a marina with a high-speed ferry, recreational areas and a movie complex. Guy Thomas of Guyco said the elderly should live "with plenty of security, but with a creative and glamorous theme."

"The only problem I foresee there," he said, "is traffic. A lot of planning still needs to be done on it. We're not going in and fight with anyone. We're environmentalists. It would be a pleasure to see that property cleaned up."

Mr. Thomas said his company had discussed developing the county property with county officials.

The Sport Realty Companies of Great Neck, representing the Nongovernmental Unit of the United Nations, said the agency wanted an office campus; a high-technology conference center; housing for staff members from overseas; recreational areas with a golf course, tennis courts and picnic areas, and a ferry to Manhattan. The president and general manager of Sport Realty, Harrison Gray, said the administrative arm of the United Nations wanted to relocate from Manhattan to a region with lower rents and a large pool of workers. "This is an opportunity to enhance the local area and bring an international focus to the Island," Mr. Gray said. "We would be bringing in a whole new industry that we've never had before and helping to develop an international culture for the Island. Let's face it, manufacturing is not going to revitalize Long Island. It will be the service industry, and this complex would fit into that concept in an international way."

But Mr. Gray also pointed out that although Morewood was "a diamond in the rough, it is also a potentially contentious development site."

"I don't want to be Don Quixote here," he added. "It's too expensive a role. I've been through enough zoning and administrative battles on the Island to know it doesn't pay. Besides, my client is being wooed by other areas such as Westchester, where there isn't a problem."

The Long Island Sound Heritage Endowment of the Sierra Club Foundation proposes a North Hempstead Regional Park in a four-phase project over five years. The chairman of the Long Island section of the foundation, Kenneth Robinson, said that the town's need for cash could be met by golf and tennis centers built and run by developers. A marina and athletic complex with concessions would also contribute to the income. That plan calls for preserving 435 open acres.

"This gives you an opportunity to be very creative with a sensitive piece of land," Mr. Robinson said. "Nature has taken back the land that hasn't been mined for years. It's now revegetated. There's a forested section. There are wetlands. Obviously the landfill area is not pristine, but it could be used for passive parks."

He said financing would be from Federal, state, local and private sources.

The Cow Neck Partnership proposes a public-private compact for small-scale development, with the town's retaining interim financial control. ■

By MOIRA HODGSON

HAMBURGERS and hot dogs were — and still are — the most popular items for the outdoor grill. But the old-style barbecue has undergone many changes since the fashion for it first swept the nation in the 1940's. The current status symbols are gas grills that cost half as much as a car, flavored wood chips, exotic marinades and fancy salsas. And as Americans look for food that is low in fat and calories, without preservatives, sugar or rich creamy sauces, so the search for new flavors and ingredients continues.

As noted last week, Oriental seasonings — soy sauce, sesame oil, fresh coriander — do a great job of enhancing the taste of grilled foods, especially seafood. I like to buy shrimp in Chinatown, where they are sold with their heads on, and soak them for a couple of hours in heavily salted ice water, which leaches out impurities. They are then patted dry and tossed in a mixture of peanut oil and black and red peppers with garlic. Cooking them in their shells concentrates their flavor — and the shells can also be eaten, if you like.

Whole red snapper (cleaned and scaled but with the head on) is good scored and marinated in a mixture of minced Oriental black beans, scallions, ginger and garlic before being grilled.

And tuna, which is at its best rare, is very good cut thick, grilled so that it has a crust but is still raw in the middle, and served with traditional Japanese garnishes. To make this dish, buy only the best and freshest tuna from a reputable fish store. The version below came about after I brought home some tuna from Citarella, on Broadway at 75th Street in Manhattan, that was so fresh I started to nibble at it raw. So instead of grilling it the usual way, I decided to make an Oriental-style dish, a "seared sushi."

When cooking the following dishes on an outdoor grill, have plenty of coals and light them about 35 to 40 minutes in advance. They should be red hot so that the fish cooks quickly. Rice and steamed or grilled vegetables go well with them.

Seared Tuna 'Sushi'

Total time: 45 minutes

2 tuna steaks, about 2 inches thick and 12 ounces each
3 tablespoons cracked black pepper
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons five-spice powder
Soy sauce
4 tablespoons thinly sliced ginger
4 tablespoons wasabi paste mixed with 4 tablespoons water.

1. Wipe steaks dry with paper towels. Mix pepper, salt and five- spice powder together and coat outside of tuna. Leave for about 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Sear the tuna over very hot coals for about two minutes on the top and on the bottom.

M. A. Rasilla

Pass the sides over the coals for a minute. Cool the tuna and serve, passing the soy sauce, ginger and wasabi paste separately.

Yield: 4 servings.

Note: Wasabi paste is a Japanese green horseradish available in Asian food markets.

Grilled Red Snapper With Black Beans

Total time: 45 minutes

1 whole red snapper (about 2 pounds) cleaned, scaled, with head on
2 tablespoons minced Oriental black beans
1 clove garlic, minced
2 scallions, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, finely chopped
2 tablespoons peanut oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped coriander leaves
1 lemon, cut into quarters.

1. Score the fish twice on each side vertically. Combine the Oriental black beans, garlic, scallions, ginger, peanut oil, salt and pepper. Spread the mixture over the fish and inside the cavity. Let the fish marinate for at least 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Broil the fish for six to seven minutes on each side, or until done. To serve, sprinkle with coriander and garnish with lemon.

Yield: 2 to 3 servings.

Grilled Sesame Shrimp

Total time: 45 minutes

2 pounds large shrimp, shells on (heads, too, if possible)
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons freshly ground pepper 2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, minced
1 teaspoon red pepper flakes
2 tablespoons sesame oil.

1. Rinse the shrimp, pat them dry (leaving the shells on) and toss them in a mixture of salt, pepper, peanut oil, garlic, ginger and red pepper. Preheat grill or broiler.

2. Place the shrimp on an oiled rack and grill for two to three minutes on each side. Be careful not to overcook them. Remove them from the grill, place them in a bowl and toss them with sesame oil. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings. ■

Most Paints Have Latex Bases, but Alkyds Have Improved

By JOHN WARDE

CHOOSING outdoor house paint has always been challenging, especially since air-pollution laws have become stricter. As a result, manufacturers are reformulating products, causing some, specifically oil- or alkyd-based varieties, to have different qualities.

Most paint today is latex based. The term refers to the chemicals in the binders, which make up the film that forms when the paint dries. The best latex-based paint contains 100 percent acrylic binders, which adhere more strongly than other types and also bond to a wider range of surfaces.

Next is paint with vinyl-acrylic binders, followed by paint with binders of vinyl terpolymer. In all latex paint, water is used as thinner to maintain the correct consistency for application. As the water evaporates, the paint dries.

Oil-and alkyd-based paints use as binders vegetable oil like linseed oil, or alkyd resins, which are synthetic. Because neither paint is dissolved by water, mineral spirits are used as thinner. For practical purposes, the terms "oil" and "alkyd" are interchangeable. Paint containing solely oil as a binder is virtually nonexistent. Most varieties contain just alkyds, or else a blend of the two.

Because of its water content and the composition of its binders, latex paint emits few of the hazardous fumes called volatile organic compounds that new pollution laws limit. As a result, most manufacturers have done little reformulating of latex paint.

High-quality latex paint continues to be a better choice than alkyd paint for painting house exteriors. Its assets include durability, ease of application and cleanup and faster drying time. Latex paint also resists bleaching and fading better, has less odor and has better resistance to mildew.

Latex and oil paints use similar pigments but have different binders and thinner.

Alkyd paint, on the other hand, contains chemicals that emit volatile compounds, heretofore in large amounts. Conventional alkyd paint has traditionally been admired for its hardness, sheen and smooth application on rough surfaces.

Newer varieties, reformulated to comply with new regulations, are softer and less shiny. But they also tend to fade and chalk more readily as they age, because they contain fewer solvents and more solids, and their thickness makes them less easy to apply.

The newer alkyds are generally a better choice than latex on heavily chalked surfaces that do not respond to cleaning, on surfaces to which three or more coats of alkyd paint already adhere and when temperatures are below 60 degrees or above 85, the optimum conditions for applying latex. Because of their flexibility, the newer alkyds are less brittle and therefore less prone to cracking and peeling than the older variety. Newer alkyd paint also has less odor and is less of a fire hazard.

To estimate how much paint is needed measure the rectangular areas to be painted by multiplying their widths by their heights and measure the triangular areas by multiplying their heights by half their widths. Add the figures together and show your answer in square feet.

Next, measure the areas of any features that will not be painted. Add them together and subtract that sum from the total. Divide the answer by the spread rate on the paint-can label, which is the approximate number of square feet a gallon will cover. The result is the estimated number of gallons needed to apply one coat of paint to the area calculated.

The best results with latex and alkyd paint depend on proper surface preparation, and that may require applying primer and sealer.

To estimate amount of paint needed for one coat, total the surface area and subtract areas not to be painted. Divide answer by spread rate printed on the can.

Primer promotes adhesion of new paint. Sealer keeps paint from being unevenly absorbed. Primer-sealers contain both ingredients.

Primer-sealer is usually not needed when repainting previously painted wood surfaces that are in good condition. But wash such surfaces free of dirt and chalked paint, preferably with a rented power washer, before repainting. Sand shiny areas lightly, so that the new paint will grip better.

Primer-sealer is required on painted wood surfaces in poor condition and to cover places where bare wood is exposed. It is also required on unpainted new wood. Latex or oil-based primer-sealer can be used under latex paint. Use oil-based primer-sealer beneath alkyd paint and for severely chalked surfaces that cannot be thoroughly cleaned. For wood that stains easily, notably cedar and redwood, use a water-based acrylic primer-sealer, regardless of the paint type. To cover individual stains like those from nails or knots use primer-sealer containing shellac.

Before repainting masonry, wash and scrub the surface thoroughly to remove loose particles. If that exposes masonry, apply masonry sealer or water-based acrylic primer-sealer. Otherwise, none is required. To prepare new masonry, apply either product.

Aluminum and vinyl siding can be painted with acrylic latex paint without using primer. Surfaces have to be thoroughly cleaned, and aluminum siding has to sanded. When selecting paint for aluminum siding, choose a flat variety, to avoid highlighting dents.

Never sand vinyl siding or scrub it with a wire brush, because that can damage the surface. Choose a color that is the same or lighter than the existing one. A darker color can allow siding to absorb too much heat, causing it to warp.

Galvanized metal like that of gutters and downspouts need not receive primer, either, unless rust is visible or extra protection from rusting is desired. In such cases, clean the metal by washing it and then wiping it with mineral spirits. Treat rust damage if there is any and apply two coats of a rust-inhibiting primer. ■

Animals That Ignore the 'Keep Out' Signs

IT was Jim Henson's popular puppet, Kermit the Frog, who sang "It's Not Easy Being Green."

Well, it's not easy being a black squirrel either, especially when the rest of the squirrel family is gray. The squirrels in the neighborhood are the usual furry gray, except for one. And for want of a more dynamic name, the neighbors have dubbed him Blackie.

This squirrel lives where there are ample tall shade trees, green lawns and flowering trees and shrubs, but its life has proved to be rather lonely. The gray squirrels chase him away. It has no other playmates and always seems to be by itself, although squirrel watchers know that black coats are often the norm in the litters of the Eastern gray squirrels.

There does not seem to be much sympathy for squirrels of any color among gardeners. These ubiquitous animals have a bad reputation of brash behavior. Their penchant for digging gets them into serious trouble. They use their paws with rapid speed to dig up everything: the newly planted tubs that sport brightly colored spring pansies, the first signs of spinach seedlings in the vegetable patch, the flowers of hardy bulbs, especially crocus, and in the fall, the bulbs themselves.

Squirrels even knock off the tops of tulips. They nibble a petal or two and then leave carcasses of the flowers to wilt. The daffodils and hyacinths remain untouched, thankfully.

Squirrels also dig holes, big ones, in flower borders. Again, their busy little paws whip away at the soil in that ceaseless search for buried nuts or whatever. If only squirrels had files, or even computers, to help them keep track of where they put what.

Squirrels are also talkers. They will scold incessantly from their high tree perches as warnings to the rest of the family. Then they chase one another up and down the tree trunks or "fly" from branch to branch with their tails unfurled like sails. Even though Blackie may be singled out for his distinctness, he is not innocent and has picked up the same bad habits. The destruction goes on.

Although deer have top billing in this regard, squirrels must surely come in second. Many gardeners have given up on certain spring flowering bulbs, especially crocus and tulips, because they know that the squirrels always seem to get to them first.

Bulb merchants, and some gardeners, too, have been praising one particular crocus species as being squirrel proof, or at least squirrel resistant. These claims are for the species Crocus tommasinianus, a native plant of northern Bulgaria with soft purple flowers. This particular crocus species reseeds itself generously and is considered ideal for planting in places where many flowers are needed. For some reason, the squirrels do not find this particular crocus to their liking.

There is yet another troublemaker in the garden. This one has long ears, a short buttonlike tale and a twitchy nose and is know as the Eastern cottontail. As cute as these rabbits may seem to be, they are voracious nibblers.

It is no small wonder that those who enjoy salads often refer to themselves as rabbits. These cottontails find succulent leaves are just about the tastiest fare around. Overnight, they can ruin a thriving vegetable garden. And it is not just lettuce that is threatened. The rabbit palate is especially drawn to the tiny new leaves of all vegetable seedlings including spinach, beets and chard. Even the new growth of some of the perennials is not immune as long as the new leaves are succulent and tasty.

Of course, there are other animal nuisances. There are the mice and voles that feed on roots and chipmunks that nest in walls and feed on various tasty morsels. And skunks are noted for digging up lawns while they search for grubs.

The best solutions are those that discourage the populations in the first place. Live trapping to take the animals elsewhere is a kind answer, but it doesn't always work because some soon find their way back home.

Another solution is a large dog that takes on a barking guardianship of the property. But this can take on unwanted dimensions. The appearance of rabies in the Northeast has made caution a prime consideration.

Red pepper flakes and chili powder sprinkled on the ground where favorite flowers and plants are growing works for a time to ward off nibblers. So do the many commercial repellents that can be sprayed on plants and soil to create an unpleasant odor. But all too soon, the animals wise up. There are all kinds of solutions and usually the best foils are those that are worked out individually. You are on your own. ■

Enchanting a Citybound Youngster

Family photograph of William Perry 3d, center, who will be visiting Genoveses in Syosset.

By LISA BETH PULITZER

IF you ask William Perry 3d to flip for it, he just may take you literally. The shy 9-year-old from the Bronx has made a hobby of walking up the sides of walls and flipping off backward into mid-air.

"They call him Flipman around here," said his mother, Hongfar Perry, who lives with her four children in an apartment on 116th Street and Teller Avenue near Yankee Stadium. "He does all kinds of neat things for the kids in the neighborhood. He's very gymnastic."

In the summertime, William said, he likes to go with his mother to a nearby beach to practice his flips in the sand, but he conceded that that his favorite activity was swimming on Long Island with the Genovese family.

Paul and Kathy Genovese of Syosset are Fresh Air Fund volunteers who open their house to William for two weeks each summer. Each year the fund provides 7,200 underprivileged children with free summer vacations.

The children from 6 12, visit host families in rural and suburban areas across 13 states from Virginia to Canada. An additional 2,500 children attend one of four camps at a 3,000-acre complex in upstate Fishkill.

"Every morning William wakes up and asks me, 'Are we going to the pool today?" said Mrs. Genovese, who said she learned about the program from a notice on a bulletin board at her son's nursery school.

At least three times a week Mrs. Genovese takes William and her two children, Paul Jr., 8, and Kristin, 6, to swim at her mother's pool a few blocks from their house. On other days, she said, he likes to stay in his pajamas and play in the backyard.

"He loves the water," Mrs. Genovese said. "When he first came to us he started off in the shallow end, barely able to tread water. By the end of the two weeks he was doing backward flips off the diving board."

"It's fun," William said. "We go to the pool and the beach. Some days I like to go out in the back, because they've got swings in the backyard. This summer will be my third time."

The Fresh Air Fund began in 1877, when the Rev. Willard Parsons, a minister of a small rural parish in Sherman, Pa., asked members of his congregation to provide country vacations for children from New York City tenements.

Children are selected to participate in Fresh Air Fund programs based on financial need. All are from low-income families, with s majority receiving welfare.

"I like the Fresh Air Fund because I can send my kids to the country,"

William, 9, of the Bronx, visits under a two-week Fresh Air program.

said Mrs. Perry, a homemaker who works odd jobs to help make ends meet. "The Genovese family is so nice. They spoil William. I send him there with a bag of clothes, and he comes back with all kinds of things. Last year he came home with a baseball bat."

Her two older daughters, Shanlin, 10, and Lotus, 12, also visit Fresh Air families. For the last three years, Lotus and another Fresh Air child visited an older Fresh Air family in Boonsville, close to the Canadian border.

"She's in the country with the beetles and stuff," said Mrs. Perry, who explained that the family likes to dress the two girls in long country-style dresses. She said they learned how to pick corn and participate in other agricultural activities.

Mrs. Perry recalled one incident in which her daughter was playing in the fields and felt something crawling on her leg. "She told me, 'Mommy, something jumped up on my leg,'" Mrs. Perry recounted. "'It was big, like the palm of my hand. I thought it was a mouse or something. I was screaming, and the lady told me not to worry. It was only a beetle.'"

On first-time visits Fresh Air children are invited to stay with host families for two weeks. Sixty percent are invited back to the same families year after year. Reinvited youngsters may continue with the fund through the age of 18, and they may spend entire summers in the country.

This year William decided that he wanted to stay an extra two weeks. "He kind of requested by letter that he stay for a month," Mr. Genovese said. "He sent us a letter for the holidays. It read: 'Merry Christmas, Happy New Year. I'm doing good in school. Can I stay for a month?'"

Paul Jr. and Kristin are thrilled that their friend will be spending the Fourth of July weekend with them in Montauk at the family's summer house. "We want William on our trip," said Kristin, who sat on the couch clutching her blanket. "He's just like another person in the family." On his first trip to Montauk, William witnessed Mr. Genovese's winning third place in the annual shark tournament. "William was standing on the dock with me when I brought in a 328-pound mako shark," Mr. Genovese said. "He was so excited."

At home in Syosset, William, Paul Jr. and the other boys in the neighborhood like to ride bicycles and play basketball and baseball. "The kids can't wait for him to come," said Mr. Genovese.

At night William shares a room with Paul Jr. "He shares my bunk bed," Paul Jr. said. "He sleeps on the bottom, and sometimes in the middle of the night he jumps up on my bed and sticks his face into mine and scares me. He's very funny."

At the end of his visit the entire family takes William back to the train station for his trip home to the Bronx. "There isn't a dry eye at the train station," Mrs. Genovese said. "We all miss him."

The nonprofit Fresh Air Fund depends primarily on private contributions. It costs $297 for a visit with a volunteer host family and $816 to send a child to camp. Donations may be sent to the Fresh Air Fund, 1040 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10018. Families who would like to be hosts can call (800)367-0003. ■

THEATER REVIEW

The Indelible Memories Of a Ghetto in Wartime

Jeffrey Sanzel as the Puppetmaster of Lodz.

By LEAH D. FRANK

JOINING in the memorials of the Holocaust, Theater Three in Port Jefferson is presenting through Wednesday "The Puppetmaster of Lodz," a deeply moving play by Gilles Segal.

In the theater, an attempt to understand an event as enormous as the murder of more than six million people can best be made through the experience of one character.

In "The Puppetmaster of Lodz," Mr. Segal's character is a Jewish man who has escaped from one of the most notorious concentration camps. He is hiding in a small rooming house on the outskirts of Berlin, and he refuses to believe that the war has been over for five years.

The man, a leading puppetmaker before the war, keeps his door locked and slips money to his landlady to buy his small provisions. She keeps urging him to come out, but he is convinced he will be arrested and killed if he does.

And so he stays in the room, creating puppets and an imaginary touring troupe and making plans for how they will some day astonish the world with their artistry.

The play is basically a monologue by the puppetmaster, who is trying to find some capacity for living with memories twisted by horror and hate. Meantime, the outside world of reality keeps knocking on his door with news that the war is over.

Once the puppetmaster accepts that, he has to begin to sort out what is fact and what is fiction in his own mind. Most of all, if the Nazis have been defeated, he has to learn to live again. It is the struggle to remember what being alive means, when one's memory served death, destruction and betrayal, that forms the basis of the play.

Jerry M. Friedman has directed this production with sensitivity for the subject, but most important he has brought out the play's vein of humor and decency. This is an unsparing play, but it is by no means depressing.

Jeffrey Sanzel is gentle as the artist who molds his fantasies, dreams, nightmares and heartbreaking realities into a world of puppets and marionettes. In a part that could so easily tip over into melodramatic excess, Mr. Sanzel seems like a mouse living in the wall of a big frightening house.

He putters around the room, adjusting his puppets, talking to them, eating his bread and jam and generally being sweet and inoffensive, if perhaps a trifle odd. It is when his German landlady knocks on his door that terror crosses his face for a split second, and one begins to see the depth of this character's fear. By the end of the play, Mr. Sanzel's effective portrait is more that of a sane man trapped in an insane world than of a madman escaping from reality.

The landlady is played by Evelyne Lune with a believable touch of pragmatic concern for her tenant. Thomas Connor does yeoman's work as a succession of visitors whom the landlady takes to the puppetmaster to try to prove that the war has been over for years.

Brent Erlanson gives a powerful performance as the man who finally convinces the puppetmaster that at least one nightmare is over, even though many more are yet to begin. It is Mr. Erlanson's depiction of human kindness and understanding that allows the play to end with an affirmative note.

Theater Three's memorable production of "The Puppetmaster of Lodz" in its small Second Stage playhouse is surprising not because it is good, but because it was the only play on Long Island done in conjunction with the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising and the opening of the Holocaust Museum. Apart from anything else, the theater's sensitivity to this issue deserves its own applause. ■

Suzanne DeChillo/The New York Times

The carousel at Nunley's Amusement Park, built in 1910, is at the center of a dispute involving an intersection in Baldwin.

By VIVIEN KELLERMAN

IT is a typical Long Island story. A developer wants a variance to build on property zoned for houses. Residents fearing, among other problems, an increase in traffic are opposed. But this case has a twist, because in the center of the dispute is an 80-year-old hand-carved carousel.

The controversy is over four acres at the intersection of Sunrise Highway and Milburn Avenue in Baldwin. Three acres are zoned for business, and one acre, with a house on it, is zoned for residential use.

For 54 years Nunley's Amusement Park, a collection of eight kiddie rides, a miniature golf course, restaurant and the carousel, has been at the site. The Lercari family, which bought the amusement park in 1964, wants to retire and sell the operation. But the market for amusement parks is not large, and selling the site has not been easy.

But the land itself is more appealing to developers, and one has offered to purchase the entire operation, if it can obtain a zoning variance that would allow a 44,200-square-foot supermarket on part of the residential parcel. In exchange, the developer, King Kullen, says, it will keep the carousel.

The carousel, built in 1910 by Stein & Goldstein, a well-known carousel maker in Brooklyn, is one of fewer than 125 working carousels in the country. Aside from its antique value, to hundreds of thousands of people on Long Island whose children and grandchildren have visited the amusement park, mentions of Nunley's summon up waves of nostalgia.

Nostalgia as a Tool

Some critics contend that nostalgia is being used to divide and conquer. "It would certainly be sad to see the carousel lost," said Pat Cardillo, who has lived in Baldwin for 17 years and whose house is near the amusement park. "But I can't let the carousel stand between me and the value of my home," Ms. Cardillo said.

She is one of 1,500 signers of a petition asking the zoning board to deny the variance. With Milburn Avenue one of two north-south roads through Baldwin, Ms. Cardillo's main objection is that increased traffic will lead to the widening of the avenue, construction that would also take part of the residential properties along the road. "Why should people have to lose part of their property because one man wants to put in a supermarket?" she asked.

Ms. Cardillo is also concerned that if the variance is granted, other property owners along Milburn Avenue would request rezoning.

"I have no control over what they build on the commercial part of the property," Ms. Cardillo said. "I realize that. But I do not want a supermarket smack up against the house next to me."

The Lars Nilsen family, which also lives next to the site on Milburn Avenue, has hired a lawyer, Thomas Pantalis, who said he hoped to impress the Zoning Board of Appeals that a variance would threaten the resale value of the Nilsens' property. "Obviously the carrot that is being waved is the presence of the carousel," Mr. Pantalis said. "Many residents, including my own, are not opposed to saving the carousel. But not as part of an agreement to allow encroach on the residential area."

Michael Dergarabebian, a lawyer for the residents, who have seen two plans for a supermarket, said he understood the Lercaris' right to level the amusement park or sell the property. In either case, he insists, it should be done following the zoning already in place.

"Obviously," Mr. Dergarabedian said, "the land is worth a lot more money to a developer who can use all four acres for commercial use than one who can only use three. But the Lercaris used the land all these years and made their money on it. Now they have to sell it as it is zoned. The fact of the matter is that there is an existing house on the residential plot, which negates the developer's argument that that portion of the property is worthless to him."

Mr. Dergarabebian said residents also believed that the supermarket would drive other businesses out of the area. "There are about 50 empty stores in Baldwin," he said. "With a supermarket this size we can expect even more."

In addition Freeport High School is just east of the amusement park. Mayor Art Thompson of Freeport Village said revised plans to relocate a loading dock further east, a move intended to ease Baldwin residents' concerns, would pose an environmental threat to students at the school, because it abuts the athletic field.

"Let's face it, trucks sit and idle, and their noxious gasses will permeate our athletic field," Mr. Thompson said, adding that he had expressed these views to King Kullen. "We've entered into discussion, and I expect that we will make progress.

"King Kullen does its own market study. If it believes it can do business, than it's a decision it has to make. What it comes down to is competition, value and service. Whoever gives that will get the customers."

A further complication is a one-acre parcel at the corner of the intersection, which is owned by Al Baldwin Transmission. A lawyer for the shop, which has been at that location for 20 years, said that the owner would like to sell his property to King Kullen, forcing the company to own the entire corner lot of five acres, but that King Kullen is not interested.

The lawyer, Eric Sacks, said: "If the variance is issued to King Kullen, eventually the traffic will be so heavy, the county will have to widen Milburn Avenue. At that point, it will condemn part of my client's property for a road cut, effectively putting him out of business."

Mr. Sacks said he could understand from a business point of view why King Kullen would not want to buy property that the county might acquire. "They say that if they want a glass of milk, they have no need to buy the whole cow," he added.

Mr. Sacks said if the county condemned the transmission, he he would seek an injunction to stop that. "I can't let King Kullen use community taxes just so he can get more cars into his parking lot," he said.

If the carousel is eliminated, three acres would be large enough to construct a supermarket, although not necessarily one as large as King Kullen proposes. A vice president of King Kullen, Tom Cullen, said if there was no zoning variance the company would probably not be interested in the property. "I don't know what the future will be if we can't get the size store we want," Mr. Cullen said.

King Kullen has offered the Lercaris $1 million for the carousel alone, and Mr. Cullen said if the company obtains the variance, it intends to preserve and operate the carousel.

"The community considers the carousel almost a landmark," Mr. Cullen said. "We're making a commitment to saying that as part of our approach, we would purchase the carousel and preserve it."

He acknowledged that historical groups had expressed interest in operating the carousel.

"We can't determine what we will do with the carousel until we know whether our plans are approved," he added. "We see it as a way to sell food and preserve the past. What's the alternative? It is going to be just another strip mall?" ■

Growing Beyond Deft Signature Desserts

By JOANNE STARKEY

LONGTIME restaurantgoers have encountered Diane's desserts at some of the Island's top dining establishments. Now Diane has opened her own restaurant, next door to her famous bakery in Roslyn.

Diane's restaurant is a simple, sunny, straightforward, two-story beauty of understated elegance. Masses of pussy willows and wildflowers stand guard in antique tin buckets in the brick-floored entry. Branches of flowering dogwood bedeck the mirror-backed bar.

The appealing high ceilings and brick floors augment the noise level on crowded evenings, however. A second-floor carpeted dining room is less striking but quieter.

White lacy cafe curtains and butcher paper set over white tablecloths help create a bistro look. Adding to the French mood are photographs of Parisienne bistros in the 1930's and large French posters from that era.

Yet, Diane's is more East End than Left Bank. The light, airy ambiance, young, clean-cut serving staff and the fashionable food would be at home in the Hamptons.

Everyone expects the desserts served at Diane's to be sensational, and they are. Appetizers and main courses are geared toward lightness, making dessert a real possibility, unless, that is, diners have overloaded on the good chewy bread and thin crisp cheese toasts.

All desserts, including ice creams, are homemade. The favorites at our table were a creamy banana tart drizzled with chocolate sauce; a triple-threat chocolate combination of moist brownies, fudge sauce and chocolate ice cream; a homey plum cobbler topped with cinnamon ice cream, a devilishly rich individual chocolate-mousse cake and a luscious lemon cheesecake.

Diane's

Ratings are based on the reviewer's reaction to food and price in relation to comparable establishments.

The first courses are elegant. A standout is the salad of field greens, with its crisp potato ring. The necklace of paper-thin, crisply fried, home-cut potato chips sits atop the springy greens. Also impressive is smoked salmon arranged on corn cakes set over a pool of crème fraîche and sprinkled with black and red caviar.

A platter of grilled vegetables is catapulted to greatness by its risotto tart. The tart, shaped like a small pear, is crunchy brown outside and creamy white goodness within.

The lightly packed crab cake paired with a corn-and-black-bean salsa and a garnish of mâche was tasty but overpriced at $9 for one cake. Two additional appetizer letdowns were large chewy fried calamari and strong-tasting fried oysters.

Diane's light leanings can best be seen at entree time. Of the dozen choices, there are one beef, three chicken and two vegetable-pasta possibilities, with the other six options all fish or seafood.

The sole red meat, a filet of beef, won kudos for its tenderness, flavor, pink peppercorns and spiffy chive-infused mashed potatoes. The bistro favorite, grilled herbed chicken with pommes frites, the least expensive entree ($14), also garnered praise. The juicy meat and crisp home-cut french fries were joined by crunchy sweet-potato chips.

Also lighting up the palate were spinach ravioli filled with well-seasoned chopped spinach and bathed in a lush brown broth rife with assorted wild mushrooms. The other vegetable-pasta combination, fusili in a red-pepper sauce topped with a few fried onions, was lackluster.

Back on track was fresh fettuccini in a sprightly lemon-caraway broth crowned by four jumbo shrimp. Also making the grade were a grilled chicken breast atop a bed of spinach and adorned with wild mushrooms and sun-dried tomatoes and grilled swordfish over a mélange of orzo, spinach and salsa. Keeping the winning streak going was a Provençal seafood stew, a pristine assemblage of impeccable seafood in a light tasty broth.

California wines dominate the pocket-size list, with a few French selections sprinkled in. Sample a fresh, fragrant, top-of-the-line Sancerre Henri Delamotte Côtes De Mainbray, 1991, at a bottom-of-the-line price of $17. Among the reds, a lively medium-bodied Rodney Strong Old Vines 1988 zinfandel ($24) from the Russian River Valley is worth tasting. ■

À la Carte | For Sea Cliff, a Tiny but Exceptional Newcomer

By RICHARD JAY SCHOLEM

THERE are not enough seats in Ken's Place, a tiny Sea Cliff storefront restaurant, to serve all the people who will want to eat there once the word gets out about this exceptional, inexpensive spot.

Ken's Place, at 64 Roslyn Avenue (674-3752), is the creation of Ken Lammer, a chef from Manhattan, who has worked with masters like David Bouley and David Burke at the River Cafe, as well as Contrapunto, Yellowfingers and the former Zanghis on Long Island. He learned his lessons well.

The shiny new Ken's Place is a restaurant for the 90's, with its recession-sensitive prices, casual cafe atmosphere, no-smoking policy, superfresh ingredients and light, imaginative American, Italian and Asian-influenced dishes. Sea salt, canola oil and organically grown tomatoes are used in all the cooking and marinating.

This sparkling new storefront across from the Sea Cliff firehouse is Mr. Lammer's first venture as an owner, and it shows. There is a sense of pride and enthusiasm evident in everything, from the sweet sharp waitresses to some very individualistic touches.

13 Picturesque Tables

Mr. Lammer has handpainted the top of each of the 13 tables with different designs. The polished wood floors glisten, and plants line the front window and hang from the ceiling.

An eclectic group of neighborhood types crowded the week-old restaurant during a recent visit. Included among them were some Little Leaguers fresh from the playing field, a flute-playing longhaired representative of the Woodstock generation with his wife and daughter and a goodly number of clean-cut young couples.

Fluffy pillows of focaccia served with a virgin olive oil dip, not butter, set the stage for what Mr. Lammer refers to as his "health-conscious American cuisine."

Although Ken's has not yet received a liquor license, there are some interesting juice drinks including carrot, beet, apple, pear, orange and pineapple. A creamy rich whipped combination of the last four ($2.50) tasted like a fruit milkshake. Apple-ginger iced tea and sodas are $1.

Mixture of Cultures

The cross-cultural American, Pacific Rim and Italian mixtures that abound at Ken's were immediately evident at appetizer time. Tortillas with an Oriental skew ($4.95) had been cut into quarter-inch strips stuffed with eggplant, roasted in hoisin sauce and served upright, with ginger chips atop and an airy wasabi sauce below.

Three tender asparagus spears drizzled with balsamic vinaigrette ($4.95) were flanked by focaccia squares crowned with roasted red peppers. A special of polenta and organically grown tomato sauce ($4.95) was ringed with mushrooms and topped with low-moisture mozzarella of the same sort that is used in Ken's pizzas. The yeastless whole-wheat razor-thin pizza dough is baked in a brick oven until crisp.

The pizza margherita ($5.95) sported super-fresh tomato cubes, slivers of garlic, fresh basil and the mozzarella.

A generous portion of grilled turkey scaloppine marinated in tahini, honey and scallions and perched on an Italian white-bean confit and wilted greens was terrific ($10.95), as was salmon accompanied by tomato-corn salsa, carmelized onions and a fan of avocado ($13.95). Both entrees came with a glistening salad of fresh endive, arugala and romaine.

It takes a deft, watchful chef to keep thin turkey cutlets and fresh filets moist, and Mr. Lammer successfully achieved that. A simple satisfying pasta — penne covered with redolent endive, pristine shredded radicchio, fresh basil leaves, lemon juice, garlic slivers and oil — fuses flavor and lightness.

Desserts, most of which are served with real whipped cream, batted .500. piced polenta-apple torte ($2.95) was dry despite a commendable blueberry compote, and the puff pastry on a tasty banana tart filled with chocolate-almond flour ($3.95) was rubbery. The two standouts were a fluffy, gossamer, sugarless cheesecake and a rich, intense, flourless chocolate cake with ripe strawberries.

The average check for the light, inexpensive food is in the $12 to $15 range.

CHANGES After limping along for two years, Violets, an antiques-filled country-style American restaurant at 341 Pantigo Road, East Hampton (329-0600), has changed its name, chef, manager, décor and menu.

Early last month Violets became Jackstraw. Paolo Penati, who won a considerable following in his years as chef at Fresno in East Hampton, has assumed command of the kitchen. Alex Rhodes, known for his previous associations with Webb City in Sag Harbor and 1 Ocean Road in Bridgehampton, now manages the 220-seat restaurant.

Typical of Mr. Penati's American-Mediterranean-style dishes are grilled Portobello mushrooms with fontina cheese and herbed oil and salmon tartar with cilantro and roast peppers.

OPENING Empire Szechuan, 849 Walt Whitman Road (Route 110), Melville (424-3663), another outlet of the Manhattan-based chain, opened this month. It features Chinese, Japanese and Taiwanese food, and will offer music, dancing and karaoke entertainment.

WINE TASTINGS The Maidstone Arms, 207 Main Street, East Hampton (324-5006), in conjunction with Amagansett Wines and Spirits, will hold a Swiss wine dinner on Friday evening. André Berclaz, a Swiss native who owned the Berclaz Restaurant in Bridgehampton for the last six years, will narrate the six-course $52 event. The wine and food to be served reflect the French, German and Italian regions of Switzerland. One entree is veal shank with fresh noodles. Another is medallions of monkfish with a white-wine-and-lemon-butter sauce. ■

LONG ISLAND GUIDE

MOTHER'S DAY EVENTS

How the family celebrates Mother's Day today is a matter of personal choice. If the great outdoors is appealing Old Westbury Gardens (333-0048) is combining strolls through the early spring gardens with a "Salute to Mothers" plant sale. The program begins at 10 A.M. and continues to 5 P.M.

These are other attractions:

¶"Forest Ecology," 11 A.M. at the Sands Point Preserve (883-1612).

¶A Spring Nature Walk at 1:30 P.M. in Connetquot River State Park in Oakdale (581-1005).

¶"World of Reptiles," 1 P.M. at the Theodore Roosevelt Bird Sanctuary on Cove Road in Oyster Bay (922-3200).

More passive pursuits include the Designers' Showcase at Whispering Pines, a 30-room mansion, circa 1923, on Old Tappan Road in Lattingtown. It is open from noon to 5 P.M. (674-0866).

The Royal Hanneford Circus performs at 1 and 5 P.M. at the State University at Farmingdale (420-2103).

There are also family type musicals like these:

¶"South Pacific," at the Plaza Playhouse, Old Bethpage Road in Old Bethpage at 3 P.M. (694-3330), and the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall, Main Street in East Hampton at 2:30 P.M. (324-4050).

¶"Fiddler on the Roof," 2 and 7 P.M. in the Gateway Playhouse, South Country Road in Bellport (286-1133).

For classical music a concert of Baroque Chamber Music will be offered by the Eastern Suffolk School of Music at 5 P.M. in the First Universalist Church on Main Road in Southold (369-2171). The performers are a cellist, Olga Zilboorg; a soprano, Elisabeth Palmedo, and a harpsichordist, Tamara Slobodkin. The music is by Bach, Dowland, Handel, Purcell and Vivaldi.

AUTHORS' WORDS

Three writers who like to talk about their work will speak on Tuesday at a a luncheon sponsored by the Meadowbrook chapter of the Brandeis University National Women's Committee. The writers are Barbara Rogan, whose "Heartbeat Away" is being published this month; Syrrell Rogovin Leahy, a k a Lee Harris, author of "The Good Friday Murder," and Peter Wyden, who wrote "Stella — One Woman's True Tale of Evil." They will appear at 11:15 A.M. in the Cotillion on Jericho Turnpike in Jericho (997-7737).

On Wednesday, it's only talk and no food in Great Neck. Beverly Coyle will discuss her latest novel, "In Troubled Water," at 8 P.M. in Womanspace on St. Paul's Place (829-6566) and Melvin Jules Bukiet gives the lowdown on his "Stories of an Imaginary Childhood" at 8 P.M. at the local library on Bayview Avenue (466-8055).

Friday brings two additional possibilities. They are B. D. Colen talking about "O.R.: The True Story of 24 Hours in a Hospital Operating Room" at 7:30 P.M. at Book Revue on New York Avenue in Huntington (271-1442) and Reed Farrel Coleman speaking about his new mystery, "Little Easter," at 7:30 P.M. in the Half Hollow Hills Library on Vanderbilt Parkway in Dix Hills (421-4530).

'THE NEW POETRY'

Poetry and music take over on Wednesday, when a poet, Esther Iverem, shares the stage with a saxophonist, Fred Ho, in "Live! On Stage: The New Poetry," part of a series at the Heckscher Museum on Prime Avenue in Huntington.

Future installments include "Can Poetry Matter?" a session with Dana Gioia and Nina Cassian, on May 19; dramatic readings by Frederick Feirstein and Collette Inez, on June 2, and "New Sound Poetry: Trombone, Violin, Voice," featuring a poet and performer, Wayne Providence; a jazz violinist, Billy Bang, and a trombonist, Craig Harris, on June 9 (351-3250).

MONOLOGUE IN OAKDALE

John Monteleone, an actor whose previous solo work, "Diary of a Madman," met with acclaim, will be on hand on Thursday to perform in "Perfectly Normill People." In the monologue Mr. Monteleone creates 11 characters like a pigeon-feeding nuke salesman; a slum child playing a new war game, Rambo-Eastwood-Bronson and an aging former feminist in menopause.

The show will be presented at 8 P.M. from Thursdays through Saturdays and at 7 P.M. on Sundays through May 30 in the Dowling College Performing Arts Center in Oakdale (244-3155).

MORE NEW WORKS

Two psychotherapists from Great Neck, Selwyn Mills and Max Weisser, and a composer, Lesley Stoller, have combined their talents for "Love, Torment & Lollipops," a satirical look at psychotherapy.

Thanks to the Great Neck Theater Guild, the musical about "three couples in search of romance, happiness and a good therapist" will have makes its premiere on Friday at 8 P.M. in the Parkville School on Lakeville Road in Great Neck. It will be performed on Fridays and Saturdays through June 5 at 8 P.M. and at 2 P.M. on May 23. (358-4244).

Another playwright, Robert Karmon of Nassau Community College, will have his latest work read on Wednesday. It is "Godhavn," a drama about "self-actualization set against the rise of spiritualism, chicanery, flim-flam and the 'new age' of America." The reading is at 8 P.M. in the Peninsula Library on Central Avenue in Lawrence (239-3262).

PHILHARMONIC FINALE

The Long Island Philharmonic ends its season on Saturday. Joined by a cellist, Carter Brey, and under the baton of Marin Alsop, the orchestra will play works by Beethoven, Haydn and Tchaikovsky at 8:30 P.M. in the Staller Center at the State University at Stony Brook.

The concert will be repeated at 7:30 P.M. next Sunday in Tilles Center on the C. W. Post Campus of Long Island University in Brookville (293-2222).

50TH ANNIVERSARY

For the 50th anniversary of Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein collaboration fans will have two opportunities on Saturday.

The Merrick Chorale will offer "1943-1993: 50 Years of Rodgers and Hammerstein" at 7:30 P.M. in the Community Church on William Place in Merrick (378-2285).

In Montauk, "Some Enchanted Evening, the Songs of Rodgers and Hammerstein" will be performed by a touring quintet. This concert, which is free, is at 7 P.M. in the school on South Delray Street (668-2474). ■

Armen Petrossian, Owner
Petrossian Restaurant

"Our restaurant had a new chef, new style of food, new prix fixe menus, and we were looking for a way to convey that to current and potential customers. The decision was easy: We chose The New York Times based on previous advertising results. Despite the initial cost, we profited in the end because our customers rely on the advertising information in The Times. We can't think of another publication in New York with that power."

Veteran Jazz Trumpeter In Festival's Spotlight

By BARBARA DELATINER

MARK MORGANELLI, once faced with the iffy prospect of supporting himself as a jazz trumpeter, decided early in his career to branch out a bit. Along with performing, he assumed the mantle of impresario, producing jazz concerts and recordings, as well as multimedia arts festivals.

It is as performer that Mr. Morganelli returns on Saturday to his alma mater, North Shore High School in Glen Head, to headline the North Shore Schools Arts Festival. He and his Jazz Forum All-Stars — an alto sax player, Donald Harrison; a guitarist, Vic Juris; a bassist, Harvie Swartz, and a drummer, Jimmy Cobb — will appear at 8 P.M. to cap a day of arts activities.

The aim of introducing jazz to a wider public suits Mr. Morganelli, and that is a reason he expanded his own horizons.

"Sure, I began producing concerts to help make a living," he said. "But I also wanted to, and still want to, perpetuate jazz. You know, frequently I run across youngsters and even people in their 20's who never heard of, say, Louis Armstrong, Ella Fitzgerald, Miles Davis, Benny Goodman or Harry James or any of the other greats in jazz history. It's a shame that we're raising generations who know nothing about this original American art form."

This was not the case with Mr. Morganelli, who began hearing jazz and swing standards while still in his crib. Although neither his father, Joseph, who works in airline-cargo sales, nor his mother, Terry, internal auditor for the North Shore School District, is a jazz musician, there was music in their house, he said.

"Mom played the piano," recalled Mr. Morganelli, who will be 38 on Saturday. "And Dad had these drumsticks. He'd get down on the floor, drumming along with records by Sinatra, Glenn Miller, the Dorsey Brothers, Tony Bennett. All the swing and big-band-era stars."

Mr. Morganelli's career began in fourth grade, when his best friend began studying the violin.

"So I did, too," Mr. Morganelli recalled. "I lasted about a week. I just hated it. Then my father suggested I start the trumpet and learn to play like Harry James. The rest, like they say, is history."

Alumnus of Bucknell

The "history" includes participating in music in the North Shore schools and going on to Bucknell University, where he performed with and managed the Bucknell Jazz and Rock Ensemble. In his time with the ensemble, it cut four records and played enough club dates to raise $20,000 and attend the Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland and make a three-week 6,000-mile United States tour.

> 8 hours a day 7 days a week 'really got my chops together.'

After graduation and a five-month stint with a touring group that he organized, the Quadrant Jazz Quintet, Mr. Morganelli returned to Glen Head. Practicing eight hours a day, seven days a week, for four months, he said, "really got my chops together."

"I sent a tape to Bob January," Mr. Morganelli recalled, "and got hired for the Bob January Original Swing Orchestra, which was playing at the Top-of-the-Gate in Greenwich Village."

On the strength of earning $10 a night once a week for playing four sets with the band, Mr. Morganelli moved to the Village and started making contacts in the jazz world.

Mitchell Seidel

Mark Morganelli, jazz trumpeter and producer.

He rented a 2,200-square-foot loft and founded the Jazz Forum Loft/Club, an informal nightclub rehearsal hall and recording, radio and television studio that lasted four years. In its brief life it attracted the cream of New York's emerging and established jazz musicians.

The demise of the Jazz Forum in 1983 sent Mr. Morganelli to other spots in Manhattan like the Village Gate and the Entermediate Theater. That year he also met Ellen Prior at a 10th-year reunion of his high school class.

Concerts in the Park

The couple married seven and a half years ago, and they have a son, Ian, 3½, and produced, in 1985, the Riverside Arts Festival. "I moved into Ellen's co-op on the Upper West Side," Mr. Morganelli said, "and pretty soon I was asked by some neighborhood activists to do a series of concerts in Riverside Park."

The concerts grew into a multimedia four-events-a-week 10-week festival, which Mr. Morganelli still produces. He is also music coordinator at Birdland and a new club, Yardbird Suite, which the owners of Birdland plan to open soon on Cooper Square. Mr. Morganelli is also the New York producer for Candid Records, where he has brought out 40 albums.

That is in addition to 50 to 100 dates a year in jazz spots like the Blue Note, Sweet Basil and the Village Gate and in festivals and clubs throughout the United States and Europe. He plays original music, mainstream jazz that owes much to Miles Davis, his "all-time great favorite artist," and Thelonious Monk, and pop standards that encompass show tunes and big-band favorites.

Since Mr. Morganelli seems to create festivals wherever he goes and the family moved to Dobbs Ferry last year, he is now organizing a series entitled "Jazz at the Music Hall in Tarrytown." ■

Christian Music's Up-to-Date Sound

By MARJORIE KAUFMAN

A RECORDING artist and songwriter originally from East Islip, Margaret Becker, has made a musical odyssey from the steps of the Metropolitan Opera to the gates of heaven. Ms. Becker is part of a growing group of musicians who are gaining recognition for spreading "music with a message."

In the last decade such music, called "contemporary Christian music," has nearly tripled in popularity, according to reported record sales. From its fringe associations as a 60's counterculture associated with the "Jesus movement," the genre has progressed to a significant industry with recording stars, awards and radio stations.

On Long Island, WLIX-AM in Bay Shore has been broadcasting contemporary Christian music since 1979. The station also sponsors a concert series at the Smithtown Gospel Tabernacle. "Our job," the director of the program, Jerry Williams, said, "is a unifier, uplifter and informer."

Successful Labels Acquired

Riding the wave, major record companies have started buying contemporary Christian labels. More traditional inspirational Christian performers like Amy Grant and Michael W. Smith are "crossing over" and showing up on the top-10 charts.

Nashville, the hub for contemporary Christian music, is now home for Ms. Becker, 33, who moved there in 1985. Within weeks of arriving and with just a demonstration tape on hand, she signed a contract with Sparrow Records, the largest privately owned Christian recording company.

"It was probably one of the few times that a little bit of the aggressive New Yorker in me helped my career," said Ms. Becker, who was a writer for a year before she started performing.

In September 1992, Sparrow was acquired by Electronic Music Industry. "This has provided a whole new distribution beyond the traditional Christian marketplace," a publicity agent for the company, Brian Smith, said. "You'll be able to walk into Tower Records or even Kmart and buy Margaret's recordings."

Melding her faith with her music, Ms. Becker has produced award-winning spiritual love songs to God in ballads spiked with rhythm-and-blues influences and a rock overtone. As a leader in progressive Christian pop rock, she travels nationally and overseas six months a year.

'Right Up There With Madonna'

"In Sweden, there is no distinction between secular and contemporary music on the radio stations," she said. "My music is right up there with Madonna."

It has also won Ms. Becker three Grammy nominations for Christian rock album and female gospel performance, and two Dove Awards in 1992 from the Gospel Music Association.

Sparrow Media Relations

Margaret Becker

Tomorrow, Ms. Becker's "Soul" album will be released on the Sparrow label, produced by Charley Peacock and distributed by Cema and Sparrow. A tour in the fall to the New York metropolitan region will take Ms. Becker back home.

She calls the new album a combination of a Los Angeles pop sound and New York blues, with even more rhythm-and-blues overtones.

Referring to herself as a "devout Christian" rather than a "born again Christian" and her music as contemporary, Ms. Becker distinguishes her work from gospel. "Contemporary Christian music takes a modern musical approach, incorporating lyrics that appeal to the common spirituality in all of us," she said.

The singer was reared as an Irish Catholic in a working-class family in East Islip, where, she said, "attending church on Sunday was fine, but anything more was a little weird." Her parents' musical tastes, she said, ranged from classical to jazz.

"As a child," Ms. Becker recounted, " when my father came home from work I remember dancing on his work shoes to the Tijuana Brass. Mom's idea of an ideal Sunday was to take me to the library and listen to an entire Bach violin concerto."

Her own musical talent and taste began to shape Ms. Becker's life. After violin and voice lessons, she taught herself guitar and began composing. By 16 she was playing in Long Island jazz clubs three nights a week. "All I wanted to do was move to Manhattan and play the clubs," she said.

But Ms. Becker ended up attending James Madison University in Virginia, studying radio and television. While working at an extra job busing dishes there she met a woman who gave her a renewed faith and changed her direction. "She was a stellar person," Ms. Becker said. "One day, she put a Bible in my hand, and I went from there. My music took on a spiritual slant.

Back on the Island, Ms. Becker started playing in church coffeehouses. "I used to travel to a church in Harlem each Sunday until I found the Smithtown Gospel Tabernacle," she said.

Ms. Becker studied operatic technique in Commack with a Juilliard graduate, Gloria Hilborn, 65, who sang with the New York Philharmonic. "The older your voice is, the better it gets for opera," Ms. Becker said. "I think about going back to it some day. A dream is to be in the chorus at the Met."

The singer combines her life and her music with a philosophy revealed in the album "Simple House." Christian and non-Christian audiences may appreciate the music for its searching and questioning, as well as for a universal spirituality that provides a measure of integrity.

Fulfilling Two Requirements

"I'm attempting to fulfill two requirements," Ms. Becker said. "They are to love God with all your heart, soul and mind, and love your neighbor as yourself."

Ms. Becker has become a spokesperson for Habitat for Humanity, the international ecumenical relief group that seeks to "make decent shelter a matter of conscience and action."

A "Build This House Tour" last year was combined with the release of "Simple House." Concerts were planned around building sites where Ms. Becker helped construct houses with volunteers, as well as offering a percentage of the sales of the album to the projects. "Growing up on Long Island," she added, "I recalled for how many people the dream of owning their own home could never be possible. Habitat for Humanity is an open-armed organization that can lift people out of that cycle. It's a hands-on faith-and-action group, which weaves a beautiful tapestry of what people can do when they bond together for a common unselfish cause. Everyone walks away with a feeling of ownership." ■

Gorky's Influences on a 40-Year Career And 5 Concerned With Current Topics

By HELEN A. HARRISON

Martin Barooshian

Firehouse Gallery, Nassau Community College, Garden City. Today 1 to 5 P.M., tomorrow 11:30 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. and Tuesday 11:30 to 4:30 and 7 to 10 P.M. Through Tuesday.

The exhibition surveys nearly 40 years of Mr. Barooshian's paintings and prints. Several of the early oils show the influence of Arshile Gorky, a fellow Armenian-American artist, as paintings like "Pandora's Box" and "Cupid and Psyche" share Gorky's fascination with biomorphic forms. At times they appear to be growing plants, while they can also look like cells or body parts.

The deliberate ambiguity recalls, in addition to Gorky's well-known late garden paintings, the fantasies of Archimboldo and the penchant of Surrealists for organic allusions.

Often the human body is a mere excuse for an elaborate sequence of interlocking elements that incidentally describe a figure, much as Archimboldo used fruit and vegetables to construct a face. That device can become overly mannered, but it works well in "Dance of Joy," where a contrasting grid structure moderates its flamboyance.

In the graphic media, Mr. Barooshian's swirling shapes become filigrees of line that define and animate his subjects. Whether treating a general theme like "Pollination" or a specific portrait — "Beethoven," for example — his prints and drawings use interlocking linear arabesques to make lively stylized compositions.

"Making Art as If the World Mattered"

Discovery Gallery, 3 Brewster Street, Glen Cove. Tuesday through Saturday noon to 4 P.M.

Each of the five artists in this group show deals with an issue that has significance beyond the strictly personal, reflecting the current trend toward art that deals with social, political and cultural topics.

Nevertheless, in spite of a subject's worthiness and the undoubted sincerity of the artist in addressing it, the result has to succeed on esthetic terms if it is to communicate effectively. Not everyone here lives up to that expectation.

One who does is Chris Coffin, whose impressive installation is in the front gallery. The piece comprises a group of catering-size pickle jars in which material collected from various Long Island beaches is preserved.

These reliquaries, carefully sealed and date-stamped, contain evidence of man's negative impact on the environment, but they are more than haphazard records of pollution. Carefully arranged and catalogued, they are at once clinical and suggestive, as when audio tape, which often defaces roadsides, parks and shores, is presented not only as litter, but also as documentation of the elements into which it intrudes.

Joyce Parcher and Marjorie Small deal with the dehumanizing effects of poverty, hunger and homelessness. Both painters use technical crudeness as a metaphor of the raw, sometimes brutal circumstances that they depict, but neither rises above that device to force new awareness or heightened involvement on the viewer's part.

Ms. Parcher tries to ennoble her figures with golden auras suggesting saintliness, a tired device of dubious validity. Ms. Small's approach is less pretentious but equally preachy, using a messy montage technique to hammer home the injustices visited on the urban poor.

Even more shrill are Rita DiGia's indictments of the modern yet ageless war machine, as demonstrated in the Persian Gulf war. Once again, the pale horse of death is trotted out and put through its grim paces against a backdrop of blazing ruins, wounded refugees and smart bombs. We hardly need Ms. DiGia's tear-stained sloganeering to remind us that war is hell.

The central issue is more subjective in Ann Bragg's flamboyant paintings. They deal with psychological rather than actual warfare, symbolized by a prototypical aging matriarch and her manipulative behavior. A poisonous grotesque, this gorgon knows how to get her way, but her victory is Pyrrhic, for in gaining dominance she loses dignity.

"Inner Forces," top, by Nicolae Golici; detail of "Gender Wall," right, by Leigh Merinoff, and "Two Women Dancers" by Martin Barooshian.

"Personal Icons: Exploring Space"

Mills Pond House, 660 Route 25A, St. James. Tuesdays through Fridays 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. and Saturdays and Sundays noon to 4. Through May 30.

Each of the three sculptors in this exhibition has an idiosyncratic viewpoint that translates well into three-dimensional form. Two are concerned with the potential for human development, and the third expresses an exuberant joie de vivre that merges art and life.

Nicolae Golici, a Romanian émigré who has lived in New York since 1987, draws on personal and political circumstances to find analogies between the basis of natural growth and the structure of society. His constructions allude to molecular models, crystals and growth charts without mimicking them. Instead, they suggest the relationship of these things to sociopolitical systems.

In "Inner Forces," twisted structures of wood beams rest on a carpet of newspaper. Amid the general clutter of articles, we find many references to injustice and violence, but also to victories in the struggle for peace and democracy. Our values and goals, the artist implies, are as deformed as the wood shapes, but both are capable of being reformed.

Leigh Merinoff asks us to re-form our notion of how femininity is determined, using hollow concrete building blocks to encapsulate photographic images that refer to the female identity. One by one the blocks construct a self defined by the perceptions and expectations of others, making a wall that prevents access to true individuality. That is a rather obvious point, but Ms. Merinoff's juxtaposition of hard dense concrete and soft translucent pictures gives the work visual punch and meaning.

At first, Anthony Rubino's whimsical mixed-media constructions look like the work of a naif, but he is a trained artist who just happens to have an exuberant nature. His pieces defy description, because it is seldom clear just what they are made of or what sort of creature, if any, they represent. Not that it matters. His Trojan Horse could conquer a city by delighting its inhabitants.

For added insight into his eclectic creative process, Mr. Rubino has installed a copy of his studio in an upstairs gallery. He calls it the "Incubation Chamber," and it is clearly a hatchery for some lively sculptural ideas. ■

A Major Sculptor and Painter at the Parrish

By PHYLLIS BRAFF

ABSORBING but relatively unfamiliar bodies of work by well-known artists serve as the focus for two exhibitions at the Parrish Art Museum in Southampton. One presents the recent explorations of the sculptor John Chamberlain with the panoramic, motorized aperture camera known as the Wide-Lux, and the second reveals studies made by the late legendary Josef Albers for his now classic geometric abstractions.

Awareness of process is inescapable for viewers of Mr. Chamberlain's photographs. Decisions and control come not from sighting through a viewfinder, a step that the artist eliminates, but from the way he makes arclike gestures and jiggling motions with the camera while the film is being advanced mechanically. A result, as the curator, Donna De Salvo, notes in the catalogue, is a "cinematic stream of consciousness."

As one reads the images, which occurs instinctively in a left-to-right manner, the changes from motion to stillness, unfocused to focused or blurred to recognizable assume a distinctive rhythm. Time becomes a factor, with each moment having its own character. A parallel might be suggested with the work of John Cage.

These Chamberlain examples are significant as a way of joining the spontaneous and intuitive qualities of Abstract Expressionism with photography's credible references to the real world. A bit of the Surrealist's interest in chance is present, too.

By far the most engaging examples are the images treated as elongated composites. Dimensions range up to 14 feet, and there is an almost uncanny density of overlapping visual information. "David Budd's Wake" includes faces, a landscape and a room interior, with the unexpected juxtapositions stripping away any readily identifiable context. Viewers are conscious of a continuum of random multilayered imagery that slows down perception.

In many ways, Mr. Chamberlain has a collagist sensibility, and the way he tests combinations of casually accumulated disparate fragments closely parallels his approach to sculpture. In both media he clearly favors gleaming surfaces.

Many of the show's 10-by-24-inch color prints demonstrate how Mr. Chamberlain's photography method seems to capture an extraordinary amount of light. He frequently seeks out ceiling fixtures, glass, crystal, candles or glistening metals and then, by the arm movement with the camera, makes reflective shapes appear to extend themselves.

In "Brasserie No. 1," for example, there are wonderful paths created from golden bronze accessories, and the lamps are made to seem like soft contourless bright elements. "Earth Saviours" is also im Lights and visual effects produce some dazzling transformations that seem particularly wonderful through the hazy veil of the emulsion surface.

The lush surface gleam can be a compelling ripple in the large composites, leading the eye through a parade of surprises. A few of the smaller photographs that lack the layered light, the visual rhythm or the kaleidescopic character seem to suffer by comparison. One also senses that the images that include the artist himself are more mannered than found. They reduce the excitement of accidental content and are more about self-portraiture attitudes.

One landscape, "Early Morning," is effective, but generally the most inventive works, like "Close Blue," eliminate any depth of field and reinterpret their jumble of figures and architectural details to a single vibrant surface plane, with abstract color shapes giving way to recognizable figures. It is a creative approach to casual slice-of-life imagery.

Although the career of Albers (1888-1976) is always correctly associated with color theory — one of his books, "Interaction of Color," has been extremely influential — he was also concerned with the way space could be suggested through lines and through forms constructed with just black and gray.

John Chamberlain

"Homage to the Square," right, by Josef Albers, and detail from "David Budd's Wake," by John Chamberlain.

It is this aspect of Albers that is explored in a nicely orchestrated exhibition organized by the Chinati Foundation in Marfa, Tex., Materials are from the collection of the Josef Albers Foundation. The emphasis is on rarely seen drawings, photographs and oil studies, but they have been combined here with prints that demonstrate the final result of the preliminary notations. The blend provides clear insights into the Albers approach to abstraction.

A broad time span is represented, starting with 1934 and running to the mid-70's. The German-born Albers came to this country in 1933 after the closing of the Berlin Bauhaus, where he had been teaching.

Several sequences of studies and prints relate to the "Homage to the Square" series and are useful reminders of the theme that occupied Albers in the last 25 years of his life. Contrasts between warm and cool grays seem particularly important in this context. Photographs of austere adobe houses taken by Albers are, perhaps, most dramatic revelation, for they suggest a direct inspiration from the single rectangular portal in a typical stark facade.

Other works emphasize the physical and psychological effects that can be produced by intersecting and diagonal lines. In "Transformation A," for example, the point formed by the meeting of two angled lines appears to have the force to push the thinner line it touches.

The show is on view to June 20. The museum, on Job's Lane, is open Thursdays through Mondays ■

Crime in County Falls for Second Time in 2 Years

By ELSA BRENNER

FOLLOWING a nationwide trend, the number of serious crimes committed in Westchester decreased 10.8 percent last year, the second in a row for the county, according to the State Division of Criminal Justice Services.

But that good news in last week's preliminary Uniform Crime Report of Offenses Known to the Police was tempered by some disturbing statistics: for one, a 21 percent increase in the number of murders.

The jump in homicides to 34 in the first 11 months of 1992 compared with 28 in the first 11 months of 1991 was in large part because of increased gang activity and drug trafficking, criminal-justice officials said. A newly formed County Task Force on Gangs has found that there are 70 gangs with 1,500 members operating in Westchester.

Also, the statistics for serious crime in the county in the first 11 months of last year, of which there were a total of 30,392 incidents, show that rapes were up 8.9 percent — to 122 last year from 112 in the same period in 1991, with the latest figures reflecting increased reporting by rape victims, officials said.

Some Incomplete Figures

National statistics show that murders dropped 6 percent last year, rapes increased 2 percent, and serious crimes overall were down 4 percent, the Federal Bureau of Investigation reported. In the state, serious crimes were down 6 percent, but those figures reflected incomplete reporting from New York City for the 11 months.

The Uniform Crime Report includes data for crimes against individuals — murder, negligent manslaughter, rape, robbery and aggravated assault — and for crimes against property: burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft.

The New York Times

In attempting to understand crime patterns in Westchester, criminal-justice officials recently focused attention on gang activity, centered mostly in densely populated areas of Mount Vernon and Yonkers. In those two cities, groups of youths "prey upon the public and engage in territorial disputes with other gangs," said Robert M. Maccarone, director of Criminal Justice Services for the county.

Assaults and Drive-Bys

In the larger cities, gangs have been involved in assaults, robberies and drive-by shootings, said Dr. Tony Collarini, executive director of the County Youth Bureau and a member of the county's Task Force on Gangs, whose members also include representatives of Criminal Justice Services, local and county police and the School Budgets: Books or Boilers?

By INA ARONOW

MILDRED J. WYNN raised four children in Greenburgh and was always pleased with schools in the district. Her children, she said, "have done well," and added: "The district has prepared them well for living in the world. I have never voted against anything for the schools." Now, with her own children grown, she said, "I would hate to deprive the children in the schools of anything they need."

But this year, forced to retire because her employer is out of business, she is an older resident on a fixed income. She is torn over how to vote this Wednesday on the school budget, which is 5.8 percent higher than last year, and on a $4.5 million bond issue for long-overdue building renovations. A "yes" vote will mean higher taxes for her and other residents. The bond issue alone will add about $34 a year for 20 years to the taxes on a $250,000 house.

State cuts and tax rebates are factors in district voting.

The Greenburgh Central Seven School District also faces financial stresses shared in varying degrees by all school districts in the region. These stresses are emphasized every spring when voters go to the polls to pick school-board candidates and vote on a budget. (Residents of city school districts, however, do not vote on the budget.) Under state law, voting dates, set by the district, can fall on any Tuesday or Wednesday in May or June.

In addition to rising costs from inflation, Greenburgh and other local districts are getting far less state aid than three years ago despite a modest increase expected in the coming fiscal year. Schools have to plan for additional space, resources and teachers for increased enrollments coming through the lower grades of the children of the baby boomers of the 1960's. Immigrant children, mostly from Central and South America, are also swelling enrollments in some districts.

Also, a snowballing number of tax challenges are being filed by corporations and homeowners, resulting in lower property-tax assessments, a consequence of long-outdated assessments. School districts have to refund blocks of taxes collected in previous years, and the remaining property owners absorb a greater share of the tax burden.

Maintenance Deferred

Westchester County figures show that about $120 million in property-tax collections were refunded in the last five years. About half of that was taxes paid to school districts.

In this environment, Greenburgh has become a worst-case scenario illustrating what eventually happens when a school district defers building maintenance for more than a decade rather than cut educational programs for the children or raise taxes further.

Roofs in the Woodlands Junior-Senior High School are so severely damaged that water has destroyed insulation and roof decks. Floors are buckling on the auditorium stage and in the industrial-arts room. Shelves in the music room are ruined. Skylights, which filtered light into the high school and an elementary school, are boarded up.

Schools had to be closed temporarily on winter days because heating systems didn't work. A temporary oil tank sits above ground at the high school because there is no money to replace the old one, which collapsed. An old fuel line leaked oil into the soil and a nearby pond, requiring emergency cleanup.

LONG before there was Samuel Beckett and the Theater of the Absurd, there were W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan and their theater of witty absurdity.

It has been 122 years since their first opera, "Thespis," opened and quickly closed in London — rarely to be heard of again — but time seems only to burnish the luster of the other 13 works they created together between 1871 and 1896.

"The sun may have set on the British empire," said Christopher Beach, director of the Performing Arts Center at the State University here, "but not on Gilbert and Sullivan. There is probably a performance of one of their operas going on somewhere around the world every week of the year."

Highlights and an Opera

Scratch a Mozart lover like Mr. Beach and out come professions of a lifelong love of Gilbert's lyrics and Sullivan's music. It was in part his attachment to the pair's "crackle, wit and charm," Mr. Beach said, that led him to mount the Performing Art Center's own show, "An Evening of Gilbert and Sullivan," which can be seen here next Friday and Saturday at 8 P.M.

The program, which features a soiree musicale of favorite Gilbert and Sullivan songs, performed with orchestra, and a fully staged production of the one-act opera, "Trial by Jury," is directed by Theodore Pappas, whose credits include the New York City Opera and the Canadian Opera Company.

Paul Lustig Dunkel, music director of the New Orchestra of Westchester, will conduct the New Orchestra and a cast of three British and three American singers, including the American bass-baritone Spiro Malas, perhaps best known for his recent starring role in "The Most Happy Fella."

A Collaborative Effort

Speaking in his office here a week before the three British singers — Ann Howard of the English National Opera, Gordon Sandison of Covent Garden (making his American debut) and Eric Roberts of the newly revived D'Oyly Carte Opera Company — were due to arrive from England for two weeks of rehearsals, Mr. Beach discussed his decision to take the Performing Arts Center beyond its usual role as a presenter.

"I wanted to produce here, to realize the full potential of our facility," said Mr. Beach, whose former jobs include director of operations at the Metropolitan Opera and production stage manager of the Santa Fe Opera. He said that the costume, paint and prop shops of the center's four-theater complex were generally underused.

In addition, he said, the college's theater division was full of students eager for apprenticeships, and a number of them are assisting with this production. Especially compelling, he added, was the opportunity to collaborate with the New Orchestra and Mr. Dunkel — a chance for "two of the largest nonprofit organizations in the county to work together." On-the-Job Insights on 'Take Our Daughters to Work Day'

WHITE PLAINS

JACKIE DOMINGUEZ said she was "inspired": on "Take Our Daughters to Work Day" April 28 at the Holiday Inn-Crowne Plaza here, she met a woman who was 14 when she got her first job and who now, at 35, is shouldering a lot of responsibility, traveling across the nation and making a good salary as the hotel's general manager. Jackie, who is 17 and lives in Rockland County, does not aspire to hotel work — she would like to operate her own advertising agency — but she did enjoy seeing a high-powered woman on the job.

"That general manager was an inspiration," she said. "She started so young, and she climbed so high so fast."

Jackie was also impressed with someone she knows very well: her aunt, Rosa Leon, assistant guest-services manager. "It is great seeing her at work," she said. "She's a wonderful person, and it's really encouraging to see a female on the managerial level."

Some Samples of Cooking

Nor did only executives make an impression. Inthira Leeraternpong, a cook at the Holiday Inn-Crowne Plaza, showed her 14-year-old daughter, Kulthida, what she does all day — and gave her samples. "I already know my mother's cooking is good, but I'm really interested in this kitchen at the hotel — it's so much bigger than the one we have at home," Kulthida said.

"Take Our Daughters to Work Day" was organized by the Ms. Foundation to increase self-esteem in young girls by introducing them to the world of work; it was held nationwide on April 28. According to the foundation, giving young girls a chance to see what their mothers and fathers and friends' mothers and fathers and total strangers do at a huge variety of jobs should encourage them to think about their own future.

Going Behind the Scenes

Workplaces ranged from factories to corporation head offices. Originally, the girls were to have been 9 through 15, but many younger and older ones participated. Being a daughter was not taken literally, either: while some girls went to their parents' places of work, many came in groups from school and some came from institutions.

At the Holiday Inn-Crowne Plaza, for example, the 75 participants included children, other relatives and friends of employees, a group of sixth graders from the White Plains Middle School and some residents of St. Christopher's-Jennie Clarkson Child Care Services, which is based in Dobbs Ferry.

When they arrived, the girls were organized into small groups; throughout the eight-hour day, everyone got to go behind the scenes. They met with the general manager and with representatives from accounting, human resources, the restaurant and kitchen staff, catering, sales, guest services and housekeeping.

There was also a luncheon served in one of the hotel's ballrooms, with a menu that included individual pizzas, ice-cream crepes and special strawberry daiquiris made just like the real thing but without the rum.

In human resources, Frank Calderone, assistant director of the department, asked the girls what they wanted to be. Joyce White, a sixth grader at White Plains Middle School, replied, "A lawyer," and added: "You have to be smart, you have to know how to talk well to people, and you have to be very professional. I think I can do it."

In accounting, Wanda Crosswhite, the credit manager, explained that commercial customers — corporations that hold functions at the hotel — have a certain amount of time to pay their bills. After that time, she said, she must call them up and start reminding them. "Do you get frustrated when they don't pay?" Joyce White asked. "What do you say when they keep making excuses?"

Ann Petersen, the general manager, whose 3-year-old daughter Amanda was with her, described not only her duties — "I oversee all departments of the hotel" — but also her career path. "I started when I was 14 in the kitchen of a hotel in Newport, R.I.," she said. "After graduating from college with a degree in hotel management, I worked at a hotel in Boston, then at one in Anchorage, Alaska, then in Seattle and then here. It's very exciting. I love it."

Did she have any problems being taken seriously because she is a woman?

Some Valuable Lessons

"No problems at all," Ms. Petersen said. "I simply act and look very professional at all times. I never try to become one of the guys, joking around and all that. And I always wear a suit." She gestured toward her black jacket and skirt and white silk blouse. "I never take off the jacket and sit around in my shirt sleeves."

Wendy Leibowitz, 31, an assistant executive in the housekeeping department, told her 8-year-old niece, Ashley Goszczycki, and a friend, Jena Sold, also 8, that her duties include overseeing the entire housekeeping department. She also explained to them that while she had not studied hotel management in college, it was in college that she began to think about it seriously as a career. "I got such a kick out of planning campus events and organizing meetings, I figured I would do it in the real world."

Jena said she, too, thought hotel work might be exciting, adding that she particularly liked her encounter with the financial end of things. "It was interesting hearing about accounting. He — or she — makes sure everyone pays when they have to."

Even for those who did not decide that hotel work was for them, the day had other valuable lessons.

Candice Jackson, 12, was with her neighbor from Mount Vernon, Mildred White, a housekeeper at the hotel. As she ate her pizza, Candice said: "I like seeing everybody here, but I think when I get older and have a job I want to work with children. I'd like to work at a day-care center. I see how many women who work here are also mothers. I think day care is important so other mothers can go out to work." ■

Westchester Q&A: C. Victor Lionti

Students and the Future of Classical Music

By DONNA GREENE

Jim Estrin/The New York Times

C. Victor Lionti, the music department chairman at Westchester Community College.

EACH year, C. Victor Lionti asks his beginning music-theory students at Westchester Community College in Valhalla how many have ever been to a symphony concert. Not surprisingly, he said, perhaps 2 of 40 say they have.

Part of the mission of Mr. Lionti, the chairman of the music department at the college, is to change this. In his classes, students are given what often amounts to their first exposure to classical music. He also helped bring to Westchester Community College its own professional orchestra, the Camerata.

Mr. Lionti, a graduate of the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester, came to Westchester in 1966. He taught at White Plains High School until 1974 and was principal violist of the Greenwich Symphony for 25 years.

For the last 23 years he has been the director of the Westchester Youth Symphony, which recently gave its third performance at Carnegie Hall.

Q. Why do you think young people are not interested in serious music anymore?

A. I work with two different types of young people. My work with the Youth Symphony is one type, and at the Community College I encounter another type.

Those students who seem to have an interest in serious music also have interests in other types of music. It all seems to stem from reasons similar to why I went into music myself in the first place — I heard a great orchestra play in my school at an early age. It was an inspiration to me.

Q. Is the key then for the public schools to take their music programs more seriously and then the students will do so?

A. I would say they have a greater chance, yes. I know there are a lot of cutbacks in music programs in school. But that's only part of it. The big part is also whether the parents participate and expose them to music.

Q. What are the common ingredients of the serious musicians that you have known — beyond their talent?

A. They have the exposure and the financial resources to pursue private lessons. I think private lessons are key to it all. You just can't play classical music without years of training. It just can't be done in a casual type of situation.

Q. How much do you feel these music programs have deteriorated over the last 10 or so years?

A. I'm 59 years old. I think back to my school days in Rochester. The Rochester Philharmonic used to come in and play in the elementary school. Everyone was interested in it. But by the time I was in high school I remember kids being pulled out of the auditorium because they weren't behaving.

By the time I went to college, the orchestra had discontinued playing atthe schools altogether. The reception they had gotten in the schools didn't warrant their playing there.

This will continue to be an uphill battle for orchestras. I feel very fortunate with the Westchester Youth Symphony.

People often ask me how the kids in the orchestra today compare to the kids 25 years ago. This year I've had one of the best orchestras I've ever had.

Q. What should the public schools be doing more of in their music programs?

A. The big complaints I hear from high school teachers as to why they get so discouraged is that they feel they are being pushed out of the curriculum.

When I taught in White Plains, I was frustrated because there were many kids who had gone through elementary and junior high school and done their music homework. Then they would get to high school, and orchestra period would be placed opposite a course they couldn't miss.

Every year I'd lose five or six of the very top players, the kids who are overachievers, who may have had to take their advance-placement courses, which were scheduled opposite orchestra.

Q. Is there an example in Westchester of a school district that you believe has a very good music program?

A. We always get in the youth orchestra a large number of students from Chappaqua and Scarsdale.

Q. Is this because they are wealthy school districts?

A. Yes, that's part of it. The parents can afford the private lessons, and I think these schools have had traditionally strong music programs.

Q. What do you urge parents who value music programs to do, go out and fight to keep them or place them in the school budget?

A. Yes, I think that's what they have to keep doing. I think it's rough with budgets, with everyone clamoring for lower taxes. But it takes six or seven years, for example, to really develop a pretty good string player.

Q. Among kids, is there any peer status in being involved in serious music?

A. Well, with the Westchester Youth Symphony, for example, last year the first two violinists were both accepted at Harvard, actually not in music programs. I think there is a tradition of intellectual achievement as well as achievement in music among those in youth orchestras. They are kids who are overachievers in every aspect of their lives.

Q. Who are the students you see in your classes at Westchester Community College?

A. Most of them are from a lower economic group. They can't afford private lessons, so they have turned to more popular music. A lot of them are guitarists. Teaching them has many rewards for me. I take them at a basic level of music theory and take them through several courses of theory, and it's great to see them growing.

Q. Do you find with these kids that their ignorance is great, that they have, for example, never heard of Beethoven or Bach?

A. I'm amazed. I take a survey at the beginning of the year and ask how many people have ever been to a symphony orchestra concert. Out of a class of 40, maybe one or two hands go up. So that's kind of frightening.

Q. How did that make you feel as a professional?

A. I think I realized when I went into music that I'd be part of a minority. I had braced myself for it. Yet, with their ignorance, it's exciting for me to teach these kids. You get to see how much they progress. In the basic class, some of them can't read a note, but by the end of the semester they can write melodies and simple backgrounds.

Q. Do these students also learn to appreciate classical music, or is it too late for that?

A. It's hard to break that barrier to classical music because it's still so expensive. We present concerts, the Camerata, and the music students are admitted free. And the remarks I hear from my students following a concert are really wonderful. They really do appreciate it.

Q. What is the Camerata?

A. It's a professional orchestra we have in residence at the college. It began a number of years ago when Harold Drimmer, chairman of the college's board and a great lover of music, called me and said he'd like to help out with the music program. We started a series of chamber music concerts, and it just kept growing.

A couple of years ago we added a cultural arts fee that all students at the college have to pay, and we applied for various grants, including one to have a resident symphony.

This year we gave three concerts. I feel as if we are really making a dent here in exposing the kids to this music. The other exciting thing that will happen here is that the college next year, at the invitation of Joseph Hankin, our president, will be sponsoring not only the Westchester Youth Symphony but also the Westchester Junior String Orchestra, a group for junior high school students and an elementary school group as well.

My son, Vincent, will be the new conductor of the Junior String Orchestra. So we will have a father-son team.

Q. Do you look at rock-and-roll as the enemy?

A. In a sense it is — particularly the electronic element. The minute you electrify a musical instrument, you have taken the soul out of playing it. Although you can do all sorts of wonderful things with electronic guitars, it just creates a tin ear in my mind.

Q. What does this mean for the human race?

A. I think there is always going to be this very small percentage of people who see the light, who had the benefit of something happening in their lives. But I don't think classical music will ever be for the great masses — at least not in this country. ■

Girls' Works in Holocaust Museum

WASHINGTON

WHEN the United States Holocaust Museum opened here last month, the news media focused on the stunning and somber impact of the architecture and the main exhibition halls. Words, photographs, videos and artifacts re-created the horror and madness of the period when the Nazis sent six million Jews and millions of others to their deaths. The museum is not recommended for children younger than 11.

But there is an exhibition especially for children in the museum. "Daniel's Diary: Remember the Children" re-creates the life of a boy — a composite of the children of the Holocaust — as he goes from a normal childhood to a confining ghetto, then to a concentration camp and survival.

The story of Daniel's life is especially meaningful for Matuya Brand, 11, and Nicole Zuckerman, 10, friends and fifth-grade classmates from Mount Kisco, who have made a key contribution to it. The handwriting on the pages of his diary, which are carefully placed in the rooms and passageways of the exhibition, is Matuya's handwriting. The pages describe the changes in Daniel's life and reveal his thoughts and feelings. One of many drawings submitted by Nicole was used in the diary.

Their work was chosen among dozens of handwriting and art samples gathered by Jane Lapple, head of a teaching team at Nicole and Matuya's school, West Patent Elementary School in the Bedford School District. Susan Stein, a Bedford resident and a member of the designer group that created the children's exhibit at the museum, especially liked the girls' work. Over months she gave Matuya pages of text to copy and art assignments to Nicole.

An 'Emotional Quality'

The importance of the writing samples and later assignments given to the two girls was played down so the children's work would appear natural, Mrs. Lapple said.

"I didn't know it was going to be such a big and important museum," Matuya said, after attending opening-day ceremonies in Washington.

"I was so amazed that this is what we had been doing," said Nicole, whose father took her to the capital for the ceremonies.

Ms. Stein said she chose Matuya's handwriting because it was legible and "esthetically pleasing." Nicole's artwork had a "wonderful emotional quality." Matuya claims that her handwriting had been "practically illegible" until third grade,

> A Mount Kisco contribution to a memorial in Washington.

Their work was photographed, enlarged and transferred by a silk-screening process onto parchment paper that was aged to make it look as realistic as possible.

The 37 pages of the diary go from the innocence of the entry in Daniel's room that reads, "My father helps me set up my train on the floor" to an entry that reads, "Last night they burned our synagogue" and another: "My mother and father always seem so worried. Every day there are more laws against us."

There is the "terrible" ghetto room where he is "locked inside a fence like an animal" and wants "to smell fresh air and run as far as I can" and the realization that "they are taking us away" and "I know the end of the ride is a concentration camp."

Following a common pattern in the camps, Daniel's mother and sister were killed, while Daniel and his father survived because they could do hard labor.

In a closing video, a narrator recalls that more than 1.5 million children died. "That's like a whole school disappearing every day for eight years," he says. In the final room of the 3,450-square-foot exhibit, children are encouraged to write about their thoughts and feelings and leave a message to other visitors.

Matuya, who is not Jewish, said she had heard a lot about the Holocaust but had never really understood it until she began the project. "I learned a lot and I felt like I was Daniel and I was really worried for him," she said. "I thought he was a real person and I felt like it could happen to me. Everyone was happy, but it changed so quickly for him."

Future Decision-Makers

Nicole said that "Daniel was so lucky that his creators were so nice to him" and allowed him to survive. She said that she wrote stories when she was little and "always made it a happy ending if possible."

Both girls described the exhibition as sad but said it was good for children to see it. "It made the people feel bad and learn from it, and in the future they won't want it to be like that," Matuya said.

"We are going to run the world soon, and we will make the decisions," Nicole said. "This should not happen again." She said she thought all cultures should learn about the Holocaust and "be concerned about the Serbs and Bosnia."

The girls were also moved by the Hall of Remembrance, a white room with an eternal flame. "After the sad things you saw, it was just so peaceful," Matuya said.

The museum also features a wall of about 3,000 tiles created by schoolchildren nationwide.

Ms. Stein, a freelance technical designer, worked with the California design team of Darcie Fohrman Associates for more than six months developing the exhibition. "I felt very committed to it," she said, adding that she lost members of her family in the Holocaust. "We had worked so hard to make so many conceptual points that we were so pleased that the concepts came through," she said. ■

Relax... It's a Wagner.

Recreation. Fitness. Elegance.
A Wagner means so much. And unlike ordinary pools, it won't soak up your spare time with pool maintenance chores. Because only Wagner offers these innovative features.

Pebble Tec™ interior surface.

Line your pool with the natural beauty of water worn pebbles set in a concrete matrix. Stronger, more durable and easier to clean than traditional surfaces, Pebble Tec resists staining, etching and blistering. The gentle, non-slip surface also absorbs the sun's heat, keeping your pool warmer. Pebble Tec is the only interior finish with a five year warranty.

Aquatech® ozone water purification system.

Ozone, the safest, most effective water purifier available, lets you reduce harsh chlorine and chemical use up to 50%. Ozone is simply a form of oxygen that makes water crystal clear without harming your pool and equipment or irritating swimmers' eyes and skin. And it creates no harmful byproducts.

Aquatech® in-floor cleaning system.

Cut pool maintenance to a fraction of the time required with conventional cleaning systems. This in-floor cleaning system automatically cleans dirt, sand, soot — even leaves — from your pool. Extraordinary water circulation distributes heat evenly throughout the pool — no cold spots!

Even Glo™ fiber optic lighting system.

Here at last is a "no voltage" fiber optics lighting system that will give a warm, even, elegant light. Since there are no electrical connections in the pool, the lighting system is totally safe.

DX™ computer-operated pool system with PoolTalk.

Now you can operate your pool from inside your home. Just tell the In-home Terminal how you want to use your pool and the DX POOL System properly sets your equipment, testing water and adding chemicals as needed. Your filter is backwashed automatically.
And for the ultimate in carefree maintenance — at an affordable price — get DX PoolTalk. An optional telephone modem lets your pool's computer call Wagner with a daily detailed update of your pool's operations, as well as any unusual conditions. DX PoolTalk lets Wagner continuously monitor and maintain your pool for you — even when you're away.

Call Wagner for a beautiful pool — and more time to enjoy it.

Giving Birds of Prey Some Physical Therapy

By LYNNE AMES

WHEN a bird of prey is injured, veterinary care and rest may not be enough. "Physical therapy" — retraining the bird to fly and capture food on its own — is also necessary for a successful return to the wild, said James Eyring, licensed wildlife rehabilitator and assistant director of the Environmental Center at the Pace University campus in Pleasantville.

By the end of June, Mr. Eyring should have the means to do just that. Scarsdale High School students who are participating in Youth in Philanthropy, a program sponsored by United Way Westchester-Putnam and the Westchester Community Foundation (a nonprofit organization that manages philanthropic donations from individuals and businesses), are raising $2,000 to build a new enclosure at the center. The new cage, which will be 20 feet long, 16 feet wide and 20 feet high, will help birds of prey that have been injured to recuperate and to test their newly mended wings.

From that enclosure, they will go outside with Mr. Eyring, who is a licensed falconer. He will teach them what they instinctively knew how to do before their injuries — hunt for rodents, small mammals and birds that are their natural diet.

"Think of an injured football player," Mr. Eyring said. "You can give him medical care, but if he doesn't have some training before he goes back onto the field, chances are he is not going to do very well. You can give a bird a lot of very fine veterinary attention, but without physical therapy afterward, he may not make it when he is released."

Treated by a Veterinarian

Birds of prey, also known as raptors, are birds with talons. Among the most common in the state are the red-tailed hawk, sharp-shinned hawk, Cooper's hawk, peregrine falcon, kestrel, screech owl and great horned owl. They are characterized by extraordinary eyesight — a raptor's vision is eight times sharper than a human's — and by their hunting ability.

Although Federal protection (it is illegal to kill raptors) has increased their numbers, they are still threatened in Westchester by bullets aimed at them accidentally or intentionally, cars, electrical power lines and pesticides.

The Pace Environmental Center, which offers educational programs and bird-rehabilitation services, takes in about 15 injured and sick birds of prey annually. They arrive with broken wings, concussions, electric shock, burns, infections and other problems.

They are treated by a veterinarian — usually Dr. Douglas Aspros of White Plains, who has special training in treating birds, — and are given whatever surgical and medical care is necessary. They then recuperate in one of three cages, each 10 feet wide, 20 feet long and 10 feet high, at the center. To keep them calm while they recover from injuries, the birds wear jesses, special leather leggings to which are attached tethers, which are in turn attached to perches.

When Mr. Eyring first gets a bird back from the veterinarian, he must get it to trust him and eat off his glove. As a licensed falconer, he takes his own two falcons on frequent hunting forays. Some of what they catch he feeds to the handicapped birds at the center. He also buys "pathogen-free" dead mice and frozen quail from special suppliers.

Students help raise funds for raptors.

When he judges a bird ready, Mr. Eyring attaches a creance — a long, thin, strong cord — to the bird's jesses. The bird can practice flying inside the cage. The new cage, Mr. Eyring said, will have twice the height of the old ones and will make practice flights more effective.

Next, Mr. Eyring takes the bird outside on a 100-yard creance — "the length of a football field" — to let the bird practice flying. If the bird is able to hunt successfully attached to the creance, Mr. Eyring repeats the process many times. After sufficient practice flights, it is time to set the bird free.

"If he finds quarry, if he finds something that he kills and eats, you know you have done your teaching job," Mr. Eyring said. "If he can do it a few times in a row, you take him back to the center once more, give him some vitamins and get him a final veterinarian checkup. Then, you send him on his way. You feel good, because you know he is capable of doing what he does in nature." ■

MEMORIES LAST A LIFETIME: GIVE TO THE FRESH AIR FUND

Emily's parents couldn't agree on the wallpaper, but choosing the right birthing center was easy.

When Emily's parents decided it was time to start a family, they had important decisions to make. They had to choose a doctor and a birthing center. We're pleased to say, they chose us.

Emily's pleased, too. She weighed just a little over two pounds at birth and needed the highly specialized care and expertise of our neonatal staff. With this care, a high-risk delivery became a highly successful one.

Fortunately, most births are not high-risk. We're committed to ensuring a healthy outcome for mother and baby, regardless of the ease or difficulty of delivery. Our staff includes obstetricians, pediatricians and pediatric specialists in areas ranging from neonatology to urology. Our nurses are all specially trained in labor, delivery, neonatal and post-partum care. We also offer seminars on nutrition, prenatal care, feeding and caring for your newborn, and more. But above all, we provide babies and their parents with highly personalized maternity care in a warm, comforting environment.

Crime Falls A 2d Time In 2 Years

County Attorney's office. But gangs have also been active in the smaller, more suburban communities in northern Westchester, where they have been accused of property damage and verbal harassment, among other crimes, Dr. Collarini said. Gang members in the county, she added, range in age from 12 to 32.

In looking at rape, officials cautioned that the higher numbers on the Uniform Crime Report for the first 11 months of last year do not necessarily indicate that rape is on the rise.

Toni Downes, director of the nonprofit Victims Assistance Services in White Plains, who called rape "the most underreported crime," said that the latest numbers reflect an increased willingness by victims to report rape and a greater understanding by both victims and the police that this is "clearly a crime and not just a relationship problem."

In 1990 there were 314 calls involving rape, incest or other sexual assaults to a 24-hour help line operated by Victims Assistance Services; by last year that number had risen to 525, Ms. Downes said.

Efforts to encourage reporting of rape notwithstanding, recent studies and surveys show that only 1 in 10 rape victims files charges, Mr. Maccarone said. As more victims come forward, he added, the numbers in that category on the Uniform Crime Report will go up.

'It's a Mixed Picture'

Despite the rising statistics, the county has also seen a steady decrease in some categories of serious crime, a pattern that has been consistent over the last decade, Mr. Maccarone said. For one, burglary was down to 5,306 for the first 11 months of last year, compared with 5,828 for the same period in 1991 and compared with 10,000 in 1982.

Also, negligent manslaughter, robbery, aggravated assault and larceny showed declines last year compared with previous years.

Motor vehicle theft, though, has risen over the last decade to 4,444 last year from 3,889 in 1982. But the 1992 figures were lower than the 5,811 motor vehicle thefts recorded in 1991.

"I can't say that there are any dramatic trends in place," Mr. Maccarone said. "It's a mixed picture."

Of the 34 murders in Westchester in the first 11 months of 1992, there were 13 in Yonkers, 8 in Mount Vernon, 3 each in Peekskill and New Rochelle, 2 in Larchmont and 1 each in Mount Pleasant, Greenburgh, North Castle, North Tarrytown and Mamaroneck Village.

Michael J. Craparo, Mount Vernon's Chief of Police, attributed the eight murders in his city — one more than the previous year — to a "continuing disregard for life in the street."

In all categories of serious crime except rape, Mount Vernon recorded fewer incidents in 1992 than in 1991.

Safer Than Comparable Cities

In Yonkers, Police Commissioner Robert K. Olson cited gang activity and "drugs, which are tied to almost every crime issue," as the biggest problems his department is dealing with.

But despite the increase in murders — from 9 in the first 11 months of 1991 to 13 for the same period last year — Yonkers saw significant declines in all other categories except aggravated assault, Commissioner Olson said.

In comparing the crime rates across the country of 46 cities with populations of 150,000 to 300,000, Commissioner Olson said that Yonkers, the fourth largest city in the state with a population of 188,082, had the 43d lowest rate, with 48.31 crimes committed per 1,000 residents.

Little Rock, Ark., which has a population of 175,795, had the highest crime rate, with 154.39 crimes committed per 1,000 people.

"Most people don't realize that Yonkers is a fairly safe city when compared to others of its size," Commissioner Olson said.

Of the 122 rapes in Westchester in the first 11 months of 1992, there were 35 in Yonkers, 33 in Mount Vernon, 12 in Peekskill, 7 in Greenburgh, 5 in Cortlandt, 4 in New Rochelle, 3 in Pleasantville, 3 at the State University of New York at Purchase, 3 in county territory outside municipal boundaries, 2 each in North Tarrytown, Port Chester and White Plains and 1 each in Tuckahoe, Hastings-on-Hudson, Pelham Village, Elmsford, Tarrytown, Buchanan, Bedford, Harrison, Rye, Mamaroneck Village and Mount Kisco.

Only two Westchester communities — Lewisboro and Pound Ridge — reported no serious offenses in any of the Uniform Crime Report's eight categories.

As officials tabulated the figures for last year, the county was hoping that a new gun-amnesty program would contribute to reducing serious crime in coming years. Concerned about guns in the hands of private citizens, County Executive Andrew P. O'Rourke's office and Mount Vernon conducted Westchester's first gun-amnesty program in April.

The county used money from assets seized in crimes to pay $50 for handguns and $25 for rifles turned into two locations in Mount Vernon.

The no-questions-asked effort cost the county $6,255 and netted 99 revolvers and pistols and 51 shotguns and rifles.

Satisfied with the results of the first effort, officials said they may expand the gun-amnesty program to other cities. ■

"Not Just Good Values, They Are Cheap!" –Robert Parker

1992 Duboeuf Beaujolais Have Arrived!

Reviewing the new 1992 releases of Georges Duboeuf Robert Parker comments: "Duboeuf's stricter selection process, combined with lower prices have made his wines winners again!... For the level of quality and pleasure they provide, they are not just good values, they are cheap!"

All the wines below have won first prize at the annual Villefranche wine fair. Each bottle is beautifully adorned with the "Flower Label," expressing the fact that Georges Duboeuf has chosen his best wines for Sherry-Lehmann's prestigious Flower Label.

1992 Flower Label Red	Bottle	Case
BEAUJOLAIS VILLAGES 1992	6.49	76.95
First Prize. Delicate and fragrant bouquet with lingering berry flavors. (4400)
REGNIE 1992	6.59	78.95
First Prize. "...reveals a deep, berry fragrance, a lovely thick richness on the palate, and a smooth as silk finish." - Robert Parker (4401)
COTE DE BROUILLY 1992	6.99	80.95
First Prize. Lusty gamay flavors are balanced by good body and crisp acidity. (4402)
CHENAS 1992	6.99	80.95
First Prize. One of Beaujolais' smallest crus and most concentrated in flavor and depth. (4403)
CHIROUBLES 1992	7.49	85.95
First Prize. "... exhibits a perfumed nose of red fruits, minerals, and flowers." - Robert Parker. (4404)
MORGON 1992	7.59	86.95
First Prize. "It is as seductive as Beaujolais can be." - Robert Parker. (4405)
JULIENAS 1992	7.59	86.95
First Prize. "...an authoritatively flavored wine, with medium to full body, fine glycerin and ripeness, as well as crispness and lightness, gobs of fruit, and a long finish." - Robert Parker. (4406)
FLEURIE 1992	8.49	96.95
First Prize. Boasts a flower bouquet. (4408)
REGNIE DOUBLE GOLD 1992	8.95	98.95
This cuvee has the double distinction of being selected as the Best of all Regnies and the Best of all Beaujolais crus in 1992!. (4409)

1991 Flower Label White
MACON-VILLAGES 1991	6.79	81.48
First Prize. The easy to drink, fresh and lovely Macon-Villages has become one of our white wine staples. (4414)
POUILLY-FUISSE 1991	11.95	143.40

PERRIER-JOUËT GRAND BRUT – ON SALE

ONLY $19.49 And We Deliver!

Perrier-Jouet Grand Brut demonstrates that non-vintage Champagne can often be better than vintage Champagne. Perrier-Jouet Grand Brut is rich and well-balanced, flavorsome and bone dry, revealing in full measure the elements that constitute a great Champagne. Perrier-Jouet Grand Brut normally fetches over $28 the bottle in most wine shops. In Paris, Perrier-Jouet Grand Brut is well over $30 the bottle!
Champagne lovers rejoice! Due to strategic buying, Sherry-Lehmann is able to offer the prestigious PERRIER-JOUET GRAND BRUT at only $19.49 the bottle. Less than what it would cost in Paris today!
Perrier-Jouet, a relatively small Champagne firm, produces most of its excellent Champagne from their own 250 acre vineyards located in the heart of the Champagne district. This means that every stage of wine making, from vine to bottle, is controlled by the producer. The result is a fine Champagne which Robert Parker refers to as: "delightfully fresh, creamy, fruity and frothy." Anticipate your summer entertaining needs now and save! (94)

$19.49 Bottle ON SALE $233.88 Case

Perrier-Jouet "Fleur de Champagne" 1985 Wins Hachette's "Grappe d'Or" Award!

The 1991 Hachette Wine Guide gave its highest award, La Grappe d'Or (The Golden Grape) to Perrier-Jouet's tete de cuvee, Fleur de Champagne 1985. This prestigious award is presented annually to just one wine out of more than 13,000 entries. Over 450 judges presided, sampling each wine blind. We salute Perrier-Jouet on this distinguished honor. $54.95 Bottle $659.40 Case

SPRINGTIME FAVORITES FROM THE LOIRE VALLEY

Featuring The Wine Wizard of the Loire

"Sauvion is to the Muscadet region of the vast Loire River basin what Georges Duboeuf is to Beaujolais - the area's most successful, and frequently its best producer and bottler of top quality Muscadet." - Robert Parker

"An Excellent Chianti At A Reasonable Price" –Frank Prial

CHIANTI CLASSICO 1989 Castello di Gabbiano

We Quote Frank Prial, Wine Editor of The New York Times:

TASTINGS

Gabbiano has been mentioned in this space before. Since it continues to be an excellent Chianti at a reasonable price, and is widely available, there is no reason not to recommend it once again. Gabbiano is a large property about 10 miles south of Florence in Val di Pesa, a Chianti area. The Chianti Classico is made according to the traditional Chianti formula: mostly sangiovese grapes, with the addition of grapes like ancellato and colorino. This is a medium-bodied Chianti ready to drink now, at four years of age. There is also a Riserva that has been aged in French oak. But for everyday drinking, the regular Castello di Gabbiano invariably offers excellent value for its price. The 1989 vintage was not one of Chianti's greatest, but some good wines were made, and this was one of them. (1051)

Gotti Prosecutor Seeks Vergari Seat

Suzanne DeChillo/The New York Times

Candidates for Westchester Distict Attorney met at a debate last week. From left, Michael G. Cherkasky of the Manhattan District Attorney's office, who was chosen by Democratic leaders to represent the party; Laurence Lebowitz, James Montagnino and Paul Pickelle.

By JAMES FERON

WESTCHESTER'S Democratic leaders reached into the office of Manhattan District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau last week to select an experienced prosecutor, Michael G. Cherkasky, as their candidate to succeed District Attorney Carl A. Vergari, a Republican who is retiring after 25 years.

In choosing the 43-year-old Mr. Cherkasky to represent the party in what is likely to be one of the most sharply contested races in an unusually active election year, the Democrats weighed Mr. Cherkasky's impressive background and experience against the likelihood that he will be tagged as an outsider.

Although born in White Plains, raised in Hartsdale and the North Bronx and a resident of Larchmont since 1986, Mr. Cherkasky has spent his entire law-enforcement career outside of Westchester County, most of it in the Manhattan District Attorney's office.

For the last four years he has been chief of the Investigative Division, supervising a staff of 75 lawyers, 130 detectives and 40 other staff members, a responsibility that the Democrats who selected him found to be on a scale with Mr. Vergari's office.

The candidate, who attracted attention in the prosecution of John Gotti and other prominent crime figures, had become Mr. Morgenthau's principal adviser and, in fact, gained some valuable political campaign experience in 1985 when he took a leave of absence to manage Mr. Morgenthau's re-election bid.

His four rivals for the Democratic nomination, who declined to place their names in nomination last Wednesday before the executive committee, choosing instead to go straight to a primary, sought to undermine Mr. Cherkasky and will presumably continue to seek to do so in the primary, by emphasizing his position as an outsider.

They said much of his fund-raising will occur in Manhattan, that he has had no experience with suburban crime and that his party affiliation is questionable. Mr. Cherkasky only recently re-enrolled as a Democrat, having dropped the designation, he said, to avoid charges of political influence when he was prosecuting political figures in the Manhattan District Attorney's office.

His backers argued that registering as an Independent during the prosecution of key political figures will not be seen by voters as any diminution of party loyalty. Nor do they feel there is anything wrong with raising money in Manhattan, with many of the potential donors being Westchester residents who work in the city.

Full Field of Candidates

There have been charges that he will bring New York City justice to Westchester, an implication that revolving-door procedures prevalent in the city might become the norm in Westchester. He has denied that, adding that he intends to take the Westchester District Attorney's office into the 21st century.

As for his residence, Mr. Cherkasky lived in Riverdale from 1978 to 1985, moving then to Larchmont, said Jeffrey R. Schlanger, a former assistant district attorney in Mr. Morgenthau's office who now lives and practices law in Westchester and is a member of Mr. Cherkasky's election team.

The Democratic Party leaders, in naming Mr. Cherkasky, had a rich field to choose from, in contrast to having to search in past years for candidates willing to take on Mr. Vergari, who generally won by margins

This year, by contrast, it is the Republicans who have had trouble selecting a candidate. The Republican leadership, under their party chairman, Anthony J. Colavita, settled on County Court Judge Jeanine Pirro in mid-March, but she declined to run after several weeks of reflection. At the present time the Republicans have not decided upon a candidate.

The Democratic candidates, meanwhile, had been appearing together at forums and other political gatherings, concentrating on their law enforcement experience and saying how they will manage the district attorney's office.

This benign process was sharply interrupted just over a week ago when the county Democratic chairman, Dennis Mehiel, abandoned his publicly neutral role by announcing his backing of Mr. Cherkasky.

This infuriated the other contenders, and some responded angrily. Paul Pickelle, a former prosecutor who twice was Mr. Vergari's opponent and felt he deserved the nomination now that the Democrats had a good chance to capture the office, said there should have been two issues before the executive committee when it met last week, one the selection of candidates, and the other whether Mr. Mehiel should be asked to resign.

Particularly upset was James Montagnino, a former assistant district attorney who currently is associate counsel for the Legal Aid Society of Westchester. He was the last to enter the race but seemed to be gaining ground. Last Sunday, he won the endorsement of the Black Democrats of Westchester County despite Mr. Mehiel's earlier support of Mr. Cherkasky.

Democrats choose a candidate for a post occupied for 25 years.

Another candidate is Lawrence Martin, a former State Supreme Court justice, who has been in private practice in Westchester since 1987, when he left the bench. He was once an assistant district attorney in Frank Hogan's office in Manhattan and worked under Mr. Vergari in Westchester for two years.

Also intending to challenge Mr. Cherkasky in the primary is Laurence Lebowitz, Democratic Party chairman in Mount Kisco and a lawyer in private practice.

Mr. Cherkasky, endorsed by the executive committee with only 8 abstentions of 55 votes cast, pledged to wage a hard campaign and asked for help from his rivals for the nomination, as well as from the rank and file, noting that while he was "a professional prosecutor," he was "inexperienced" as a political candidate.

Other offices to be filled by election this year include the top post, that of the county executive. Andrew P. O'Rourke, the Republican incumbent, is expected to make a formal announcement of his candidacy on Tuesday. It will be his fifth election campaign, this one against a background of alleged corruption by a close associate, Neil DeLuca, the deputy county executive, when he held the city manager's post in Yonkers, and lingering charges of intervention by the County Executive on behalf of O'Rourke family members.

He will be facing either Andrew Spano, the five-term county clerk who gained the Democratic Party leadership endorsement at the executive committee meeting Wednesday night, or Assemblyman Richard L. Brodsky, who has not yet formally entered the race, perhaps because he knew he did not have the party leadership's support. Mr. Brodsky will seek a primary victory to be able to take on Mr. O'Rourke.

The two Democrats were in a similar position four years ago, vying for the chance to run against Mr. O'Rourke. Mr. Spano stepped aside on that occasion, and Mr. Brodsky later lost to the Republican officeholder in what was considered a fairly close race.

Both Mr. Spano and Mr. Mehiel said there was an understanding then that the party would back Mr. Spano at the next election if Mr. Brodsky lost in 1989. Mr. Brodsky said that no such agreement existed, so he has been appearing with Mr. Spano at political forums, stating the case that he will be presenting against Mr. Spano in the expected primary.

Inefficient and Complacent

Mr. Spano, in seeking party unity for the campaign against Mr. O'Rourke, said he "wished Richard were here," referring to Mr. Brodsky. Mr. Mehiel, speaking later, said he thought Mr. Brodsky's decision to ignore the nominating process was "an attempt to devalue" the committee's work.

Mr. Spano, who won 42 of the 54 votes cast — the others were abstentions, presumably representing Brodsky supporters — said he intended to use his 10 years of experience as county clerk to upgrade county government, which he likened to "other giant corporations" found to be inefficient and complacent in recent years.

The executive committee also endorsed the Eastchester Town Supervisor, James P. Doody, who was unopposed among Democrats for the county clerk job that Mr. Spano held. Mr. Doody, who was praised for maintaining office in a largely Republican area, will most likely face another Spano, County Legislator Leonard N. Spano (no relation to Andrew), who was also seeking the county clerk post. ■

Judging the Value of Winning an Award

Carl David LaBianca for The New York Times

By PENNY SINGER

WINNING isn't everything. For members of the Advertising Club of Westchester, it's only the beginning.

This year, 225 entries from 48 companies are vying for the gold in the club's annual "Big W Awards" competition for creative excellence (the W stands for Westchester).

"Members are asked to show the best they have done for the year, and interest is very high," said Rosemarie Falcone, a graphics designer who is a former winner and chairwoman of this year's awards committee. "We received the largest number of entries in all categories we have ever had in our 26 years of competition."

Money Is a Major Incentive

What is it that makes the award so coveted that designers, illustrators, photographers, art directors, copywriters and public relations specialists willingly spend hours working on exhibits that will show them at their creative best?

Some of last year's winners, when asked, cited visibility, credibility, increased sales and new business — all of which can translate into money.

Ms. Falcone, who heads Falcone Graphic Design Studio in White Plains, won two awards last year: a gold for her supermarket display designed to call attention to her client's product — Adolph's Meat Tenderizer — and a bronze for a brochure printed on recycled paper.

"Winning after being judged by a jury of your peers is very satisfying in itself," Ms. Falcone said, "but frankly and perhaps more important is that the award is a distinction that has helped me build credibility with clients, which is important in this extremely competitive field."

Her awards, she said, gave her an edge in landing a recent job for the county's Department of Transportation: an assignment to design a logo to appear on all bus shelters in the county. "Five studios were competing for that project," she recalled.

Last year, Anthony P. Fotia, head of A.P.F. Design Associates in Port Chester, won nine awards at the ad club competition plus three Pinnacle Awards given by the Advertising Club of Fairfield County.

"Why are awards so important?" Mr. Fotia asked. "They're a seal of approval that makes our services more valuable to our clients, and they are very helpful for generating repeat business. The awards are a good marketing tool for us."

Especially in today's climate, Mr. Fotia added. When clients have fewer dollars to spend, he said, they want as much for the dollar as they can possibly get. "We are creatively driven, not cost driven, which has helped," said Mr. Fotia, who recently moved his company into larger quarters, doubling his space and increasing the size of his staff from 11 to 15.

'A Very Marketable Commodity'

"Our business has increased three times in two years since we became a design-marketing firm, which enabled us to broaden our client base," Mr. Fotia said. "We formerly worked on a lower profit margin doing only design. Now we execute and design entire projects for clients."

Michael Kitt, president of the Advertising Club, said that the club has 135 members and that about 75 percent of them enter the competition.

"At a time when membership in trade clubs is shrinking, ours is hale and hardy with a very active membership," Mr. Kitt said. "Our awards banquet, which will be held on Thursday, May 20, at the Marriott Ballroom in Tarrytown, is our biggest event. Awards mean not only recognition from peers, but they are a very marketable commodity."

Jan Linn, who runs a marketing and media communications company in Croton-on-Hudson, agreed. Ms. Linn, a first- and second-place winner in the public relations category last year, said: "I'm competitive by nature. I like to compete so I spend a lot of time on my entries. I took a huge blackboard and made a collage of campaigns I had done for a food company and for a phone-equipment company."

After receiving her first awards, Ms. Linn did some public relations work for herself. "I sent out a press release and a lot of people noticed it, and other people who know me saw it and, as a result, I got a number of referrals that I might not have had otherwise," she said.

Ms. Linn added that she also displays the award certificate in the book she uses to make presentations to new clients. "It's a distinction that sets me apart from the competition," she said.

Peter Piik moved the advertising agency that bears his name from Manhattan to Port Chester six years ago. For three years, Mr. Piik was co-chairman of the awards committee with Ms. Linn.

"Other than enjoying the boost to the ego that comes from being acclaimed professionally, the value of an award is largely dependent on how it is utilized," Mr. Piik said. "If it is used passively and hung on your office wall, it won't open many doors."

On the other hand, he said, his company has been using awards successfully to market its services since the early 1970's.

"One thing we always have done is to make duplicate copies of the award and send them to clients whose job won the award," he said. "The benefits that come with this kind of visibility are excellent. The other day, for instance, I went to a meeting at a shipping company in Manhattan, a client of ours, and there on the wall were six framed certificates. Four of them had our name on them for annual reports we have done for the company. That kind of exposure is terrific."

Winning "reinforces a client's good opinion of your company's work," Mr. Piik added. "It is also useful in landing new clients. For instance, when our account executives go out on cold calls, they take along a brochure we have made up, which incorporates the 12 awards we have won. It's a very effective conversation piece."

Given the economy, "today it's more important than ever to market your own wares," Mr. Piik said. "And advertising is a very hard business to advertise. But when you capitalize on awards, you create a good opportunity to tell people about yourself."

Susi Dugaw, a White Plains photographer and a member of the awards committee, said she is not an aggressive saleswoman. "The awards banquet alone was valuable because it gave me the chance to display my work to other members of the club who may give me assignments in the future," she said. "I won a first and second last year, and the awards definitely made my name more recognizable. I feel now that I have gained a slight edge. It is easier for me to discuss my work with potential clients. And even though I have been working on accepting entries and arranging them for this year's show for judging with Rosemarie Falcone since January, I'm certainly entering my own work again this year." ■

Fresh Air Fund Hosts Prepare for a New Season

By LYNNE AMES

KEISHA THOMAS had always gone to summer camp, but last year her mother, Yvonne Owens, could not spare the money for it. Mrs. Owens, an operating-room technician at the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan, called the Fresh Air Fund.

Through the fund, Keisha, who is 11 and lives in the Bronx, spent two weeks at the Edgemont home of Ruth and Neil Burger. She and another Fresh Air guest at the Burger home, 12-year-old Jamel McClennan of Brooklyn, went swimming, played softball, saw fireworks and spent hours simply relaxing in the Burgers' spacious backyard in the long summer twilight. On June 29, Keisha and Jamel will return to the Burgers for another two-week vacation.

But the Fresh Air experience is more than a tale of two city kids in country settings. Both Mrs. Owens and Lorna Mayers, Jamel's mother, a home health aide and a student in business administration at St. Francis College in Brooklyn, said the fund enables their children to expand their views of themselves and of the world around them.

Keisha and Jamel are bright, articulate, goal-oriented children: Keisha already knows she wants to be a doctor (she even has her choice narrowed down to anesthesiologist); Jamel says he hopes to turn his talent for drawing into a career in art. The more people they meet now, their mothers believe, the better equipped they will be to cope in the future.

"I always try to give Keisha a sense of self — I'm always commenting on her abilities," Mrs. Owens said. "People like the Burgers, who are also interested in her, are a wonderful influence. I think I am a positive influence, and they give her an extra boost."

Alan Zale for The New York Times

Keisha Thomas will spend her summer with the Burger family in Edgemont.

dow shades and the pillow covers." Her bedroom at home, she added, "is also nice — I have burgundy carpet, white walls and a redwood dresser and a redwood desk to work at."

Indeed, home is a place Keisha likes to be. "I like the Burgers a lot, and I'm really looking forward to coming back to them," she said. "But sometimes when I was here last year, I missed my mother a little. But then, when it was time to leave, I felt really sad, and when I got home I missed the Burgers."

For information about becoming a volunteer host or about contributing to the fund, the numbers to call are (212) 221-0900 or (800) 367-0003. ■

Expanding the horizons for thousands of city youngsters.

The Fresh Air Fund is a nonprofit agency that provides economically disadvantaged New York City children age 6 through 18 with free summer vacations in suburban and rural areas. Since it began in 1877, the fund has served more than 1.6 million youngsters.

This summer, 7,200 children will visit volunteer host families from Virginia to Maine and in Canada. Another 2,500 will attend four Fresh Air camps on 3,000 acres in Fishkill. The financing for both programs comes almost entirely from private donations.

Families who volunteer to be hosts apply to the fund and are interviewed by a committee of other volunteers in their area. Mrs. Burger, who is now co-chairwoman of Southern Westchester Friendly Town (Friendly Town is the Fresh Air Fund's name for a geographic area with volunteer committees for the fund) first decided to become involved with the Fresh Air Fund seven years ago. Since then, she said, she and Mr. Burger, their 18-year-old son, James, and their daughter, Jennifer, who is now 23 and living in California, have been the host to one or two Fresh Air guests each summer.

"All of them have been great," Mrs. Burger said. "I hope that they have had fun with us and that, maybe, we have given them something to remember. It's hard to tell so many years later. For example, the experience might open a thought about something, maybe a concept of a hobby, or a profession, or maybe a child will meet someone who will be a connection to something in his or her future."

A Pre-Season Visit

Recently, Mrs. Burger, a saleswoman at Julia B. Fee Real Estate in Scarsdale, had a pre-season visit with Keisha. The occasion was "Take Our Daughters to Work," a national, day-long event in which girls accompany friends and relatives to their offices. Keisha spent eight hours looking at houses and learning about the real estate business.

Although she did not change her mind about wanting to become a doctor, she did say she thought seeing other people's homes was "very interesting."

"I like looking at different rooms and how they are done," she said as she sat in the bedroom at the Burger house where she will sleep this summer. "I like to see if things are color-coordinated. Like this room, which is my room when I'm here. It's so pretty. The curtains have the same floral print as the bedsheets and the win-

Student-Faculty Dating: It's Not in the Rule Book

By KATE STONE LOMBARDI

A scenario that has been raising concern on college campuses might go something like this: He is a middle-aged English professor, an expert on Henry James, who appears worldly and sophisticated in his tweed jacket while lecturing to his class. She is an 18-year-old freshman, starry eyed and entranced by her teacher's apparent brilliance and sensitivity. He is flattered by her attention. An after-class tutorial leads to drinks. Drinks lead to a sexual encounter. Are they two consenting adults in love, or is it sexual harassment and exploitation?

The appropriateness of faculty-student dating is being discussed on campuses throughout Westchester, echoing a nationwide debate about whether such relationships should be tolerated, regulated or banned altogether. Faculty members at the University of Virginia recently voted to prohibit sexual relationships between professors and the students they supervise. A more stringent regulation, which would have banned romance between all professors and undergraduates, was voted down.

A survey of Westchester colleges and universities revealed that no formal policies addressing faculty-student dating are in place, but many schools said that a prohibition against such relationships is implicit in other policies regulating professional conduct.

"We view this kind of relationship as inappropriate," said James Bryan, Dean of Students at Manhattanville College. "While it isn't specifically addressed in our regulations, I do think that we would find a faculty-student relationship ruled out tacitly by our other policies, particularly with respect to sexual harassment and notions of professional conduct," he said.

A Gray Area

Representatives from the State University of New York at Purchase, Marymount College, Sarah Lawrence College, Pace University, Westchester Community College, Iona College and Mercy College also said that such relationships were discouraged by the administration though not specifically addressed in college policies.

But administrators, professors and students alike say that the issue of faculty-student dating is a complex one. Some say that the unequal power in a relationship between a student and a faculty member — particularly one who is in a position to grade or make recommendations about the student he or she is dating — is inherently exploitative. Others cite happy marriages of professors to their former students. Several psychologists who teach at local schools also stress the difficulty of regulating human behavior, regardless of what's printed in a college policy handbook.

"I can understand the impulse to legislate against this kind of thing," said Dr. Suzanne Kessler, Associate Professor of Psychology at SUNY Purchase. "But most of what we're talking about is not what falls under a strict definition of sexual harassment. In fact, the more problematic ones are the ones that seem consensual. Everyone brings up the case of the long-term, happy relationship, but that's a rarity. What you are really trying to do is smoke out the professor who every semester picks up a student to have a relationship with — the habitual offender," she said.

It is precisely because this type of relationship is apparently consensual that regulation becomes problematic.

Drawing lines between romance and harassment on college campuses.

Instances where a professor demands sexual favors for a grade or recommendation clearly constitute sexual harassment, for which there are policies and sanctions already established. But many administrators refer to faculty-student dating as "a gray area," where individual maturity levels, professor's marital status and questions of direct supervision play a role.

Professional Conduct

A relationship between a student and a young faculty member or teaching assistant who is finishing his or her master's degree, is single and close in age to that student, may present a different scenario from that between a student and an older, married faculty member, said Terrell V. Kolodzinski, dean of students on the Pleasantville-Briarcliff campus of Pace University.

"There are many variables in a situation like this," Dean Kolodzinski said. "Some people, and I'm talking about both students and faculty, have the emotional maturity level to handle it; some do not. Any complication that exists out there in the world can exist on campus," he said.

Others say that any faculty-student relationship is simply incompatible with the mission of higher education.

"This is not a moral question," said Dr. Ronald Herron, vice president for student affairs at SUNY Purchase. "This is a professional-conduct question. There are profound obligations one takes on as an educator that require us to always place the student and the act of teaching ahead of personal interest." Dr. Herron said that college students in the customary age group — from 18 to 21 years old — are still forming their identities and that involving a student in a personal, sexual relationship would interfere with that process of emotional growth.

Student-Patient Analogy

Some professors make the comparison between a faculty-student relationship and a relationship between a therapist and a patient, which is always considered unethical by professionals.

"They are parallel, though not identical, issues," said Dr. Ralph Cancro, a clinical psychologist and chairman of the Psychology Department at Marymount College. "Just as there is a transference of emotion to the therapist, there is also a transference of emotion to the professor. I can understand certain circumstances where the professor appears almost God-like and therefore is highly regarded by the student. The young person can feel in love and can fall prey to any manipulation on the part of the professor," he said.

Dr. Cancro said that under such circumstances it is the professor's responsibility to maintain the boundaries of the relationship. But he said that is was a situation that was fraught with peril because it also depended on the emotional stability of the professor. A faculty member who himself was emotionally immature might be vulnerable to a student's attention and quick to misinterpret the adulation as genuine love, Dr. Cancro said.

Is true love between a professor and student possible, let alone recognizable by regulatory codes of conduct? Most college administrators suggested that if there is real mutual attraction and affection between a faculty member and a student, it can wait until the status of one member of the relationship changes.

"Even if quite genuine love developed between two people that was not intended by either to take advantage of the other, I would be most comfortable with its not being acted out until either the student graduated or the faculty member was no longer the employee of the college," Dr. Bryan of Manhattanville College said.

Margaret Keady Goldberg, of Bronxville, married her former English professor at Marymount College, but said she did not start dating her future husband until two years after she graduated. Ms. Goldberg, said that love-stricken students were an occupational hazard for her husband, who died several years ago.

Smoking out those who habitually pick up students for a relationship.

"He'd receive all these calls from students who were having a crush on him," said Ms. Goldberg, who is now remarried. "He was always very honorable and said, 'Thank you very much, but I don't have relationships with students.' Not all professors were that honorable. Certainly these situations presented themselves, and sometimes the professor had the maturity and morals to handle it, and sometimes he didn't," she said.

Most administrators at colleges in the county said that faculty-student dating was not a problem on their particular campuses. But many students interviewed disagreed. Several pointed out that administrators were not likely to hear any complaints, given that there were no strong policies prohibiting such relationships in the first place.

"How can administrators say it doesn't happen?" asked Alexandra Passas, an Environmental Studies major at SUNY Purchase. "I've seen situations where it is clear it is going on. And I can also think of situations that are a big question, like the professor who even in class will make jokes like 'You can either take this test in class or you can come see me personally and we can arrange something.' I know some things have gone on with this guy and students," she said.

In 1990 a teacher at Westchester Community College was suspended for a year without pay in a case involving sexual harassment. The matter was handled by school officials, who were reluctant to discuss details of the incident, which involved a faculty member and a female student.

Rosemary Murray, the dean of student affairs at Mercy College, said one female student had complained about her former philosophy professor. The class was studying zen philosophy, and the teacher repeatedly suggested going to his car for private tutoring in the practice of tantric sexuality.

But Ms. Murray said the student waited until after she graduated before she went to report the incident to the administration, because she was worried about retaliation and her grade. The student was so intimidated while taking the course that she had a friend accompany her to class and to her car. The teacher, who was an adjunct professor, was not rehired the next year.

Most students said they would be troubled and feel pressured if a professor approached them; they made little distinction between harassment and dating.

"At this stage in the game I would feel insulted," said Emily Berdorf, a senior at Pace University. "But as a freshman I would have been horrified because I was very impressionable and it would have put me in a compromising position. We are here for a purpose — an education. If anyone tries to skewer that main purpose with any other agenda, I think they should be penalized. They are not doing their job, which is to teach us and send us on our way into the real world," she said. ■

By MOIRA HODGSON

HAMBURGERS and hot dogs were — and still are — the most popular items for the outdoor grill. But the old-style barbecue has undergone many changes since the fashion for it first swept the nation in the 1940's. The current status symbols are gas grills that cost half as much as a car, flavored wood chips, exotic marinades and fancy salsas. And as Americans look for food that is low in fat and calories, without preservatives, sugar or rich creamy sauces, so the search for new flavors and ingredients continues.

As noted last week, Oriental seasonings — soy sauce, sesame oil, fresh coriander — do a great job of enhancing the taste of grilled foods, especially seafood. I like to buy shrimp in Chinatown, where they are sold with their heads on, and soak them for a couple of hours in heavily salted ice water, which leaches out impurities. They are then patted dry and tossed in a mixture of peanut oil and black and red peppers with garlic. Cooking them in their shells concentrates their flavor — and the shells can also be eaten, if you like.

Whole red snapper (cleaned and scaled but with the head on) is good scored and marinated in a mixture of minced Oriental black beans, scallions, ginger and garlic before being grilled.

And tuna, which is at its best rare, is very good cut thick, grilled so that it has a crust but is still raw in the middle, and served with traditional Japanese garnishes. To make this dish, buy only the best and freshest tuna from a reputable fish store. The version below came about after I brought home some tuna from Citarella, on Broadway at 75th Street in Manhattan, that was so fresh I started to nibble at it raw. So instead of grilling it the usual way, I decided to make an Oriental-style dish, a "seared sushi."

When cooking the following dishes on an outdoor grill, have plenty of coals and light them about 35 to 40 minutes in advance. They should be red hot so that the fish cooks quickly. Rice and steamed or grilled vegetables go well with them.

Seared Tuna 'Sushi'

Total time: 45 minutes

2 tuna steaks, about 2 inches thick and 12 ounces each
3 tablespoons cracked black pepper
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons five-spice powder
Soy sauce
4 tablespoons thinly sliced ginger
4 tablespoons wasabi paste mixed with 4 tablespoons water.

1. Wipe steaks dry with paper towels. Mix pepper, salt and five- spice powder together and coat outside of tuna. Leave for about 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Sear the tuna over very hot coals for about two minutes on the top and on the bottom.

M. A. Rasilla

Pass the sides over the coals for a minute. Cool the tuna and serve, passing the soy sauce, ginger and wasabi paste separately.

Yield: 4 servings.

Note: Wasabi paste is a Japanese green horseradish available in Asian food markets.

Grilled Red Snapper With Black Beans

Total time: 45 minutes

1 whole red snapper (about 2 pounds) cleaned, scaled, with head on
2 tablespoons minced Oriental black beans
1 clove garlic, minced
2 scallions, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, finely chopped
2 tablespoons peanut oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped coriander leaves
1 lemon, cut into quarters.

1. Score the fish twice on each side vertically. Combine the Oriental black beans, garlic, scallions, ginger, peanut oil, salt and pepper. Spread the mixture over the fish and inside the cavity. Let the fish marinate for at least 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Broil the fish for six to seven minutes on each side, or until done. To serve, sprinkle with coriander and garnish with lemon.

Yield: 2 to 3 servings.

Grilled Sesame Shrimp

Total time: 45 minutes

2 pounds large shrimp, shells on (heads, too, if possible)
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons freshly ground pepper 2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, minced
1 teaspoon red pepper flakes
2 tablespoons sesame oil.

1. Rinse the shrimp, pat them dry (leaving the shells on) and toss them in a mixture of salt, pepper, peanut oil, garlic, ginger and red pepper. Preheat grill or broiler.

2. Place the shrimp on an oiled rack and grill for two to three minutes on each side. Be careful not to overcook them. Remove them from the grill, place them in a bowl and toss them with sesame oil. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings. ■

Animals That Ignore the 'Keep Out' Signs

By JOAN LEE FAUST

IT was Jim Henson's popular puppet, Kermit the Frog, who sang "It's Not Easy Being Green."

Well, it's not easy being a black squirrel either, especially when the rest of the squirrel family is gray. The squirrels in the neighborhood are the usual furry gray, except for one. And for want of a more dynamic name, the neighbors have dubbed him Blackie.

This squirrel lives where there are ample tall shade trees, green lawns and flowering trees and shrubs, but its life has proved to be rather lonely. The gray squirrels chase him away. It has no other playmates and always seems to be by itself, although squirrel watchers know that black coats are often the norm in the litters of the Eastern gray squirrels.

There does not seem to be much sympathy for squirrels of any color among gardeners. These ubiquitous animals have a bad reputation of brash behavior. Their penchant for digging gets them into serious trouble. They use their paws with rapid speed to dig up everything: the newly planted tubs that sport brightly colored spring pansies, the first signs of spinach seedlings in the vegetable patch, the flowers of hardy bulbs, especially crocus, and in the fall, the bulbs themselves.

Squirrels even knock off the tops of tulips. They nibble a petal or two and then leave carcasses of the flowers to wilt. The daffodils and hyacinths remain untouched, thankfully.

Squirrels also dig holes, big ones, in flower borders. Again, their busy little paws whip away at the soil in that ceaseless search for buried nuts or whatever. If only squirrels had files, or even computers, to help them keep track of where they put what.

Squirrels are also talkers. They will scold incessantly from their high tree perches as warnings to the rest of the family. Then they chase one another up and down the tree trunks or "fly" from branch to branch with their tails unfurled like sails. Even though Blackie may be singled out for his distinctness, he is not innocent and has picked up the same bad habits. The destruction goes on.

Although deer have top billing in this regard, squirrels must surely come in second. Many gardeners have given up on certain spring flowering bulbs, especially crocus and tulips, because they know that the squirrels always seem to get to them first.

Bulb merchants, and some gardeners, too, have been praising one particular crocus species as being squirrel proof, or at least squirrel resistant. These claims are for the species Crocus tommasinianus, a native plant of northern Bulgaria with soft purple flowers. This particular crocus species reseeds itself generously and is considered ideal for planting in places where many flowers are needed. For some reason, the squirrels do not find this particular crocus to their liking.

There is yet another troublemaker in the garden. This one has long ears, a short buttonlike tale and a twitchy nose and is know as the Eastern cottontail. As cute as these rabbits may seem to be, they are voracious nibblers.

It is no small wonder that those who enjoy salads often refer to themselves as rabbits. These cottontails find succulent leaves are just about the tastiest fare around. Overnight, they can ruin a thriving vegetable garden. And it is not just lettuce that is threatened. The rabbit palate is especially drawn to the tiny new leaves of all vegetable seedlings including spinach, beets and chard. Even the new growth of some of the perennials is not immune as long as the new leaves are succulent and tasty.

Of course, there are other animal nuisances. There are the mice and voles that feed on roots and chipmunks that nest in walls and feed on various tasty morsels. And skunks are noted for digging up lawns while they search for grubs.

The best solutions are those that discourage the populations in the first place. Live trapping to take the animals elsewhere is a kind answer, but it doesn't always work because some soon find their way back home.

Another solution is a large dog that takes on a barking guardianship of the property. But this can take on unwanted dimensions. The appearance of rabies in the Northeast has made caution a prime consideration.

Red pepper flakes and chili powder sprinkled on the ground where favorite flowers and plants are growing works for a time to ward off nibblers. So do the many commercial repellents that can be sprayed on plants and soil to create an unpleasant odor. But all too soon, the animals wise up. There are all kinds of solutions and usually the best foils are those that are worked out individually. You are on your own. ■

By JOHN WARDE

To estimate amount of paint needed for one coat, total the surface area and subtract areas not to be painted. Divide answer by spread rate printed on the can.

CHOOSING outdoor house paint has always been challenging, especially since air-pollution laws have become stricter. As a result, manufacturers are reformulating products, causing some, specifically oil- or alkyd-based varieties, to have different qualities.

Most paint today is latex based. The term refers to the chemicals in the binders, which make up the film that forms when the paint dries. The best latex-based paint contains 100 percent acrylic binders, which adhere more strongly than other types and also bond to a wider range of surfaces.

Next is paint with vinyl-acrylic binders, followed by paint with binders of vinyl terpolymer. In all latex paint, water is used as thinner to maintain the correct consistency for application. As the water evaporates, the paint dries.

Oil- and alkyd-based paints use as binders vegetable oil like linseed oil, or alkyd resins, which are synthetic. Because neither paint is dissolved by water, mineral spirits are used as thinner. For practical purposes, the terms "oil" and "alkyd" are interchangeable. Paint containing solely oil as a binder is virtually nonexistent. Most varieties contain just alkyds, or else a blend of the two.

Because of its water content and the composition of its binders, latex paint emits few of the hazardous fumes called volatile organic compounds that new pollution laws limit. As a result, most manufacturers have done little reformulating of latex paint.

High-quality latex paint continues to be a better choice than alkyd paint for painting house exteriors. Its assets include durability, ease of application and cleanup and faster drying time. Latex paint also resists bleaching and fading better, has less odor and has better resistance to mildew.

Latex and oil paints use similar pigments but have different binders and thinner.

Alkyd paint, on the other hand, contains chemicals that emit volatile compounds, heretofore in large amounts. Conventional alkyd paint has traditionally been admired for its hardness, sheen and smooth application on rough surfaces.

Newer varieties, reformulated to comply with new regulations, are softer and less shiny. But they also tend to fade and chalk more readily as they age, because they contain fewer solvents and more solids, and their thickness makes them less easy to apply.

The newer alkyds are generally a better choice than latex on heavily chalked surfaces that do not respond to cleaning, on surfaces to which three or more coats of alkyd paint already adhere and when temperatures are below 60 degrees or above 85, the optimum conditions for applying latex. Because of their flexibility, the newer alkyds are less brittle and therefore less prone to cracking and peeling than the older variety. Newer alkyd paint also has less odor and is less of a fire hazard.

To estimate how much paint is needed measure the rectangular areas to be painted by multiplying their widths by their heights and measure the triangular areas by multiplying their heights by half their widths. Add the figures together and show your answer in square feet.

Next, measure the areas of any features that will not be painted. Add them together and subtract that sum from the total. Divide the answer by the spread rate on the paint-can label, which is the approximate number of square feet a gallon will cover. The result is the estimated number of gallons needed to apply one coat of paint to the area calculated.

The best results with latex and alkyd paint depend on proper surface preparation, and that may require applying primer and sealer. Primer promotes adhesion of new paint. Sealer keeps paint from being unevenly absorbed. Primer-sealers contain both ingredients.

Primer-sealer is usually not needed when repainting previously painted wood surfaces that are in good condition. But wash such surfaces free of dirt and chalked paint, preferably with a rented power washer, before repainting. Sand shiny areas lightly, so that the new paint will grip better.

Primer-sealer is required on painted wood surfaces in poor condition and to cover places where bare wood is exposed. It is also required on unpainted new wood. Latex or oil-based primer-sealer can be used under latex paint. Use oil-based primer-sealer beneath alkyd paint and for severely chalked surfaces that cannot be thoroughly cleaned. For wood that stains easily, notably cedar and redwood, use a water-based acrylic primer-sealer, regardless of the paint type. To cover individual stains like those from nails or knots use primer-sealer containing shellac.

Before repainting masonry, wash and scrub the surface thoroughly to remove loose particles. If that exposes masonry, apply masonry sealer or water-based acrylic primer-sealer. Otherwise, none is required. To prepare new masonry, apply either product.

Aluminum and vinyl siding can be painted with acrylic latex paint without using primer. Surfaces have to be thoroughly cleaned, and aluminum siding has to sanded. When selecting paint for aluminum siding, choose a flat variety, to avoid highlighting dents.

Never sand vinyl siding or scrub it with a wire brush, because that can damage the surface. Choose a color that is the same or lighter than the existing one. A darker color can allow siding to absorb too much heat, causing it to warp.

Galvanized metal like that of gutters and downspouts need not receive primer, either, unless rust is visible or extra protection from rusting is desired. In such cases, clean the metal by washing it and then wiping it with mineral spirits. Treat rust damage if there is any and apply two coats of a rust-inhibiting primer. ■

School-Budget Time: Books or Boilers?

Susan Harris for The New York Times

Water damage has destroyed insulation and roof decks of the Woodlands Junior-Senior High School, top, and Ted Strauss, a technology teacher, held a board across the floor of the shop classroom to indicate warp damage.

tendents, said the question is: "Do we want to keep foreign languages in elementary schools or get a new boiler? We chose foreign languages, and that is what has happened."

Numa Rousseve, a Greenburgh school board member and president of the Westchester-Putnam School Boards Association, said that the policy was "a mistake." He added: "We wanted to keep the tax rate down. So we chose to patch and mend rather than do the real maintenance that should be done. But the laws of gravity and nature don't go away. We can't avoid facing it any longer. We are making a resolution that we are not going to do this in the future."

While many voters have applauded cuts in school programs, there are those who feel that administrators and teachers are not sacrificing enough and are continuing to get salary increases and good benefits while many taxpayers are losing jobs.

Voluntary Sacrifices

Mrs. Wynn said that what will probably sway her to support the budget and bond issue is the agreement by teachers, administrators and staff to give up 2.5 percent of the 6.5 percent salary increase in their contract for next year. Dr. Mazzullo will give up a benefits-increase package worth about $2,600 next year although he will receive a 4 percent increase in his $117,250 salary.

Some will not be swayed. "I think they can do the school repairs in a less-expensive manner," said Irene M. Zuck, president of the Fulton Park Civic Association, who is also living on retirement income. "I think the bond issue is too high." She said that schools are overstaffed and that administrators "have been taking care of themselves for too long without concern for the maintenance of the school and the safety of the children."

A History of Defeat

Challenging this view are parents, teachers and other community members who are campaigning for passage of the budget and the bond issue. If the bond referendum fails, it will be put up for a second vote, Dr. Mazzullo said. "If it fails the second time, the only way to pay for it is to take $4.5 million of our $30 million budget," he said. "It means we take out everything not mandated: sports, elementary foreign languages, kindergarten, gifted and talented programs, nonmandated transportation. You are in essence destroying the school system."

Many school districts try to avoid scheduling bond referendums at the same time as budget votes, thinking that the bond issue will have a better chance of passing on its own. But a separate referendum does not always guarantee smooth sailing. Port Chester's School District proposed a bond referendum in a special March election. A resolution proposing $2.2 million for construction of classrooms failed by a 3-to-1 margin. A second resolution on the same ballot for $1.16 million to carry out capital improvements failed 2 to 1.

The district has a separate proposition on its May 19 ballot to add $120,000 to the budget each year for five years to cover building repairs and improvements.

Putnam County voters in the Brewster School District have turned down two bond issues in this school year. A $36.8 million bond issue was defeated 2,103 to 1,440 in December. A pared-down, $16.6 million bond issue lost 1,722 to 1,202 in March. The bonds would have paid for a new school and repairs and renovations on the existing building. "The main reason the issue failed was the economy," said Dr. Gregory J. Vogt, the Brewster Superintendent. "The amount of taxes was too much for people to accept."

A June 2 budget vote will include a proposition to spend $197,000 for renovations in 1993-94. The middle school will also go on a 12-period day from 7 A.M. to 3:40 P.M. to help accommodate increased enrollment.

Arduous Campaigning

Voters in the Irvington School District, one of the more prosperous in Westchester, turned down a $9 million bond issue in 1991 but narrowly passed two separate bond issues in October 1992, totaling $8.3 million for reconstruction and additions. The work was delayed, however, when a taxpayer group unsuccessfully petitioned the Commissioner of Education to nullify the vote. The taxpayers claimed that the district had not revealed the extent of refunds to taxpayers challenging their property assessment. The amount was more than $500,000 this school year.

The controversy "is simply a sign that communities are deeply divided over issues of school finance and taxation," said Dr. Stephen B. Fisher, Irvington Superintendent. "It creates division in the community between those who are willing to support the schools and those who are not. The school district is in an enormously difficult financial process."

Some districts are looking to the Pelham school district for guidance in passing a bond issue. Its $8.2 million bond issue passed in November 1991 by a 3-to-2 margin, and renovations have been completed.

"We had a small but vocal tax group who were against anything that would have any implications in regard to the tax," said Dr. Dudley Hare Jr., the district Superintendent. "I think we demonstrated that there was a strong need and we had a really sound plan."

School, community and Parent-Teacher Association volunteers presented a "traveling show" at meetings, banks and the train station, showing photos of leaky roofs, safety hazards, damaged walls and inefficient, polluting old boilers, he said.

Dr. Hare observed that most of the county's schools were built at about the same time and are now due for renovations. "If any school districts are not looking at this now, they sure will have to do it pretty soon," he said. ■

ART

Chilling Out, Then and Now, At the Hudson River Museum

YONKERS

A SLIM exhibition on something known for being fattening occupies two rooms of the Trevor Mansion, the Victorian wing of the Hudson River Museum here. The self-explanatory title of the show is "Ice Cream for All." It is subtitled "The Democratization of an Elite Food."

The items in the show, which concentrates on ice cream's early history in America (Dolley Madison actually served "domes of pink ice cream" in the White House), are presented in a coolly efficient way. Bold graphics tell the story of the dessert, and the setting is painted in pastels — tangerine, cherry and pistachio predominate.

The second room is even turned into a mock ice-cream parlor with display cases doubling as small tables with chairs around them, which invite viewers to sit a spell.

The trouble is that there are actually two presentations here, with the one sometimes competing with the other: the exhibition, which is sprinkled with curious objects and written facts, and the dense, rich catalogue, which recounts the story of ice cream in detail. Many objects in the show are absent from the catalogue and vice versa. Often the show, perhaps abetted by the color scheme, seems made especially for children and sometimes condescends to a general audience.

But the book cannot provide some of the visceral sensations that the actual show does. Ice cream is one of the most hedonistic of things to contemplate; it has served as a standard metaphor for delightful experiences. Yet at the beginning of the show, a viewer encounters, head-on, some of the fearsome instruments that facilitated the birth of ice cream as we know it. These include an outsize pair of ice tongs and a long ice saw, which, mounted vertically, looks like a prime example of Constructivist sculpture.

These implements are reminders that ice cream's dominant position was a hard-won victory, but a quotation from Ralph Waldo Emerson, which is used as the keynote of the exhibition, emphasizes smoothness. In 1841, Emerson advised, "We dare not trust our wit for making our house pleasant to our friends, and so we buy ice cream." It is important that Emerson wrote "buy," for the bulk of the show concentrates on ice cream as a commercial product.

The apotheosis of ice cream as a democratic force is captured strikingly in a photograph of an early graduating class of the Good Humor Company in the 1920's. In their crisp, white uniforms, the men look like Annapolis graduates who could benignly conquer a nation.

The show also recounts both an accident and a conundrum. The chance pairing of soda water with ice cream in 1874 resulted in the ice-cream soda. The dilemma is how ice-cream sundae got its name, with the most satisfying answer being that it was invented because the sale of soda water was prohibited on Sundays.

But even though the presentation can be sugary, little else in the show is soft information. What permeates throughout is a sense of the hardness, from the hardware to the hard facts, that makes the evanescent pleasures of ice cream possible.

The point is also made that ice cream of yesteryear was much harder than today's, and so sharp knives were devised to cut it. A couple of sterling-silver knives have sinuous contours and florid patterns.

Admittedly, there is an abundance of winsome graphics, which are meant to sharpen the appetite. The design for the Eskimo Pie wrapper used from 1927 through 1940 shows the hands of a man and a woman holding chocolate-coated bars and joining them together, with the smiling face of an Eskimo child off to the side as cupid. And who could resist the kewpie doll mounted on a peach that touted Albany Ice Cream in 1920?

But what makes the strongest impression is the stark and rigid shapes from solid geometry fashioned out of cold, gray metal that were employed as containers, molds and servers during the 1920's and 30's. It is not facetious to compare the cylindrical, unadorned ice cream cans, the trapezoidal molds that fit paper containers with sloping sides or the triangular servers that eased the confection into paper cones with minimal sculpture, for the starkness of the Minimalist esthetic acknowledged a Dionysian potential while also holding it in check.

Hanging over the show is the reminder that bold strides in the packaging of ice cream were made to counter the risk of communicable diseases. The audience is subtly alerted to the risks of patronizing vendors who currently traffic in colorful syrups poured over ice shaved from exposed blocks.

But there are few villains in the show, unless the hint of foreign competition is taken as one. A wooden hand-cranked ice cream freezer made in New Hampshire in 1888 is juxtaposed against a spiffy 1990's plastic Japanese model.

On the other hand, some statistics are meant to spread cheer. In the exhibition there is a table of the average worker's wages at intervals over the last century, along with the percentage of time it took to earn a quart of ice cream. Over the years, that figure has melted down to about 15 minutes from several hours.

"Ice Cream for All," organized by Patricia M. Tice of the Strong Museum in Rochester, where it originated, is on view at the Hudson River Museum through May 30. The number to call for more information is 963-4550. ■

'Così Fan Tutte' Marks Bronx Opera's 25th Year

By ROBERT SHERMAN

OPERA fans will be pleased to note that Mozart's "Così Fan Tutte" is on the agenda next Friday and Saturday at 8 P.M. when the Bronx Opera celebrates its 25th anniversary. The opera, in English with full orchestra, will be performed at the Lehman Center Theater. The company has long been known for its inventive stagings and impressive casts, mostly drawn from the ranks of young singers. For ticket or other information, the number to call is (212) 408-1661.

Christopher Beach, director of the Performing Arts Center at the State University of New York at Purchase, has started a 10-year plan to produce Gilbert and Sullivan's comic operas with first-rate soloists, full orchestra, and a professional chorus. The first production will take place on Friday and Saturday at 8 P.M. Half of the program will be devoted to a potpourri of songs and choruses and the other half to a complete, staged edition of "Trial by Jury."

The company includes such internationally known artists as Spiro Malas (who starred recently on Broadway in "The Most Happy Fella"), Ann Howard of the English National Opera and Eric Roberts, a member since 1988 of the New D'Oyly Carte Company in London. For ticket information, the box office phone number is 251-6200.

A variety of other vocal programs are in the offing today and later in the week. Today at 2:30 P.M., the soprano Deborah Horne sings Purcell, Mozart, Poulenc and more in a free recital at the White Plains Public Library, assisted by the flutist Linda Ganus and the pianist Nadja Rence. The number to call for more details is 422-1400.

Tonight at 8 o'clock, Bruce McInnes leads the Sarah Lawrence Chorus and Orchestra in a Haydn double-header: the Te Deum and the "Mass in Time of War." This concert, in Reisinger Hall on the college's Yonkers campus, is free. More information is available by calling 395-2412.

Steve Sherman

Richard Knapp will conduct the Philharmonia Virtuosi.

Last winter, the Westchester Chorale sang "Messiah" to mark the 250th anniversary of the oratorio's premiere. Now the chorale will present Handel's "Samson," first performed in 1743. The music director, Daniel Paget, is approximating the proportions of the original performance, using about 50 voices and a Baroque-style orchestra, with David Bender, Katherine Johnson, Lisa Monheit, Stephen Bryant and David Shapero as soloists. The concert is scheduled next Saturday at 8 P.M. in the Sommer Center on the Bronxville campus of Concordia College. For more details, the numbers to call are 965-1679 or 969-5786.

In a lighter vein, Jena Smith leads the Emelin Theater Chorus in its spring concert in Mamaroneck, offering selections from such favorites as "The Merry Widow," "Carousel," "Sweet Charity" and "West Side Story" along with an excerpt from Ms. Smith's own operetta-in-progress, "Whatever Happened to Forever After?" For reservations, the number to call is 698-0098.

There is also plenty of instrumental music being offered. Today at 4 P.M., 17-year old Ariel Kemp plays the Baroque recorder as a guest artist with the Philharmonia Virtuosi under the baton of Richard Knapp in the second program in the series of Concerts in Color at Union Church of Pocantico Hills. On tap: music of Telemann, Vivaldi, Corelli, Handel and Bach. The number to call for more information is 631-8200.

Tomorrow at 8 P.M., the Hudson Valley Wind Symphony plays a benefit concert for the Music Department at the White Plains Middle School, the program designed, the music director, James Wayne, said, "to showcase the talents of our members, including Kathy Sheinhouse, who will be the soloist in Haydn's Oboe Concerto, and Donald Perlman, our principal percussionist, conducting selections from 'A Chorus Line.'" Also on the program are works by Wagner and Vaclav Nelhybel and the world premiere of Robert LaPorta's "Thirty-Two Horse Troop." A contribution of $5 is suggested. The number to call for information is 545-9033.

On Wednesday at 12:15 P.M. at Grace Episcopal Church in White Plains, the attractive combination of flute and harp is sure to give a lift to the Downtown Music at Grace series as Dianne Spitalny and Pattee Cohen join in works by Ibert, Gluck and Persichetti among others. Further information is available by calling 277-4419.

The even more exotic ensemble of mandolin, violin and piano will be part of the attraction at the New Rochelle Public Library on Saturday at 3 P.M. when Joyce and Sandor Balint (of Bronxville) and New Rochelle's own Adam Kent perform. The number to call for more details is 632-7878.

On Saturday at 8 P.M. there will be a flute and piano recital by Michael Parloff, principal flutist of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and Dennis Giauque, playing Bach, Donizetti, Copland, Mozart and Bartok in a benefit program at the Hoff-Barthelson Music School in Scarsdale. More information can be got by calling 723-1169.

The fusion of clarinet and strings is the promise of the next Performers of Westchester concerts, with the prize-winning virtuoso Todd Palmer joining the recently formed Brentano String Quartet for the Clarinet Quintets of Mozart and Brahms. A recital Friday at 8:30 P.M. will be repeated next Sunday at 4 P.M. Both recitals will be at a private home in Larchmont. For the location and to make reservations, the number to call is 693-1151.

Steve Gillette and Cindy Mangsen will appear in a folk-music program that will also introduce Ed Carey at the Treestar Coffeehouse Saturday at 8 P.M. Treestar is in the Mount Kisco Presbyterian Church. More information can be obtained by calling (203) 438-6102.

Next Sunday evening in Piermont, one of the truly great names in traditional music, Odetta — known as America's folk diva — appears at 6 and 9 P.M. at the Turning Point. For driving directions, the number to call is 359-1089. ■

Early-American Fare in White Plains

By M. H. REED

WHITE PLAINS

WE have always admired the spare elegance of this decidedly urban-looking restaurant. Although its space is long and narrow — as a city storefront eatery is wont to be — two dining levels and a sweep of brass railing create a semblance of spaciousness, and no clutter breaks that illusion. In keeping with this setting, the menu draws dishes based on the plainness and solid goodness of early-American food, and for a long while the combination was a winner. It's sad to report, then, that the bloom is fading from this rose.

Some of the fare remains notably accomplished — many of the desserts, for example — but the kitchen may be in a rut; no one seems to be interested in refreshing or reinventing even parts of the short menu. We remember similar offerings from years ago. In addition, we recently had difficulty in finding something among the appetizers that wasn't deep-fried, light as that frying batter may be. And some careless preparation was evident in misjudged seasoning and in a few overdone ingredients.

Quarropas does toss together a fine salad. This generous heap of tender assorted greens comes with the entree, and many diners will be satisfied to make this salad the first course. The hungry might begin with an overflowing platter of rings of squid deep-fried in a gossamer beer batter, a mild mustard sauce for dipping on the side.

Two other offerings, dark with deep-frying, proved disappointing. Crab and scallion fritters had a fatty quality that the sharpness of a ginger-and-lime vinaigrette could not counter entirely. And sweet potato, apple and parsnip pancakes lacked the flavors and sweetness these fruits and vegetables promise, the deep-fried crust and cranberry sauce overpowering the effort.

Quarropas

Satisfactory

478 Mamaroneck Avenue, White Plains. 684-0414.
Atmosphere: A low dais with a brass railing breaks up a simple, comfortable dining room. A few framed fruit-box labels and milk-glass lighting fixtures add pretty and interesting touches. Willing, adequate service.

Two grilled wild mushroom caps arrived slathered with silky goat cheese and topped with strips of red roasted pepper; the rest of this plate was given over to greens and segments of orange, one of the citrus garnishes that appeared on almost every plate. Considerably less agreeable was an order of duck ravioli served, the menu noted, with spicy ancho chili-orange glaze. But the glaze turned out to be a soup that was so hot from the chili that even after a cautious sampling, we could taste nothing else in that dish.

Medallions of venison came with a fragrant brown sauce, made with wild mushrooms and a shot of red wine mingled with the juices of the gamey meat. Rice and not fancy but fresh vegetables — string beans, carrots, cauliflower, broccoli — accompanied most entrees. Although cracked coriander, which was supposed to season a juicy fillet of beef, was missing, the addition of cognac to the pan juices that oozed from the filet gave the meat an interesting sweet-sharp edge.

Apricot and cranberry relish made a pleasingly pungent counterpoint to the richness of two grilled duck breasts, but free-range chicken was dry from having been cooked too long, although its chopped tomato and fennel garnish mingled nicely with the rice that came with this dish. Seafood stew, however, had few redeeming qualities. Clams and mussels that — along with nuggets of other, acceptable seafood topped a bed of pasta — were mealy, sandy and past their peak of freshness.

It is safe to look forward with pleasure to Quarropas's desserts. First-rate bittersweet chocolate cake was like the heavenly fudge we remember from halcyon days when we lived in ignorance of the evils of cholesterol. Clouds of fresh whipped cream and a strawberry made a good thing of too much of a good thing. A stemmed goblet filled with creamy frozen caramel mousse and a cookie platter were also worth having. Particularly delicious in the cookie assortment were the sweet-sour lemon square and the pecan sandy. An order of subtle ginger angel-food cake brought two huge portions, where one would have been plenty. Ask to have the citrus compote spooned on top of this cake on the side, however. This compote of mostly grapefruit segments made a poor partner for the cake. A platter of seasonal fruit brought a liberal assortment of components, some unripe and all uninteresting, nothing that the home refrigerator doesn't hold.

A dinner consisting of an appetizer or soup, entree, house salad, dessert and coffee averages $29 without drinks, tax and tip. ■

WESTCHESTER GUIDE

AIRPORT ANNIVERSARY

Westchester County Airport will celebrate its 50th anniversary with an open house on Saturday from 9 A.M. to 3:30 P.M. Sponsored by the Westchester Aviation Association, the Federal Aviation Administration and the county, the event is designed to be informative and entertaining, and may encourage some young people to take up flying as a career.

Those who wish to tour the control tower must sign up at 8 A.M. As the tower cannot cease operations, visitors will be limited to small groups.

A museum installed in the old control tower will be open without restriction. It contains vintage microphones, headsets, compasses and instruments from World War II and a collection of photographs tracking the airport's progress over the years.

Among several old-time planes that will be displayed on the airport grounds accompanied by their pilot owners are Stearmans, Piper Cubs, Wacos and Bonanzas. In addition, Northwest Airlines will conduct guided tours of one of its McDonnell Douglas DC9's and hand out junior pilot's wings to children.

Everything is free, including a pilot seminar. Among the topics under discussion will be a new system of navigating by satellite.

The airport was built by the Federal Government as a bomber base during World War II in case of an attack on the East Coast. It was turned over to the county after the war. After many years of resistance by residents, a modernization project is currently under way. On the airport's agenda are a new road system, taxiway improvements and a building to replace the World War II Quonset hut that has served as a terminal since the end of the war.

The airport is off Interstate 684 in Harrison. For more information the numbers to call are 738-3092 or 946-3846.

'FLUTE PLUS'

Whether one is a fine flutist, a so-so flutist or just a listener, the Hoff-Barthelson Music School in Scarsdale invites all who appreciate the flute to its 17th Annual "Flute Plus" gathering on Saturday at 6 P.M.

Following a flute-in with players of all ages and levels making music together, a pizza dinner will be served at 7 P.M. At 8 o'clock Michael Parloff, first flutist of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will perform works by Bach, Donizetti, Bartok and Mozart. He will be accompanied on the piano by Dennis Giauque.

The flute-in, at 6 P.M., is free; dinner costs $5, and attendance at the concert will be $10, free for students and $7 for people 65 and older. Proceeds will aid the school's Bass Flute Fund.

Hoff-Barthelson is at 25 School Lane, and the phone number for reservations or more information is 723-1169.

"Little Grandma" by Lisa Samalin is part of an exhibition of paintings at the Upstream Gallery in Hastings-on-Hudson.

SUN SENSE

Just at a time when thoughts are turning to acquiring a summer tan comes "Sun, Wrinkles and Skin Cancer," a lecture in the South Salem Library about the havoc that can be wrought by the sun — even after applications of sunscreen.

Dr. Michael Stillman, a board-certified dermatologist and attending physician at Northern Westchester Hospital, will discuss the problems of sun exposure on Thursday at 8 P.M. The library is on Main Street, and admission is free. The number for more information is 763-3857.

RECITAL ON THE SOUND

A Russian pianist, a glass of Russian tea, pirogi, caviar, smoked fish, babka and Russian vodka (for those who find tea tedious) will be available this afternoon at 3:45 in a private home in Rye.

The piano concert by Elena Wolkonsky will feature music by Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann and Rachmaninoff, and the house, overlooking Long Island Sound, contains an unusual art collection. The event is one of the Rye Art Center's series of fund-raising parties, held in private venues and combining various art disciplines.

Admission today will be $45. The phone number for reservations, location or more information is 632-3342.

ON HOLOCAUST SURVIVORS

William Helmreich, author of "Against All Odds," published by Simon & Schuster, will give a lecture on Tuesday at 7:45 P.M. about his new book at the Mid-Westchester Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. in Scarsdale. The author, a professor of sociology and Judaic studies at both City College of New York and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York, has taken a different tack in delineating the lives of Holocaust survivors. Forgoing the usual portrayals of haunted, depressed and anxious people, he concentrates on their achievements.

"It would be a travesty," he said, "if survivors were only remembered as the skeletons they looked like when they emerged from the camps." He added, "Jews who found strength and prevailed share something with all who have overcome disaster."

His premise is that the success story of the many Holocaust survivors he interviewed is not one of a remarkable people but of how remarkable people can be.

The Y is at 999 Wilmot Road; admission will be $5. The number to call for more information is 472-3300.

GOING SEPARATE WAYS

"What Will the Neighbors Think?" — the title of an exhibition of paintings, photographs and sculpture at the Upstream Gallery in Hastings-on-Hudson — might just as well be called "What Will the Viewers Think?" The gallery has assembled works by three artists who are bound to touch a number of raw nerves.

Togetherness gone awry seems to be the message in Lisa Samalin's painting of a grandma from hell and her pint-size clone granddaughter, Robert Forlini's photograph of a backyard supper revealing a family that eats together but is otherwise disconnected and Phoebe Gilman's sculptures of fragmented people and possessions.

The exhibition opens on Thursday and remains through May 30, with viewing hours on Thursday from 3 to 7 P.M., Saturday from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. and Friday and Sunday from 1 to 5 P.M. A reception is scheduled on Saturday from 4 to 6 P.M. The gallery is at 495 Warburton Avenue. The number to call for more information is 478-0407.

TAG SALE

The Emelin Theater in Mamaroneck will accept new or used collectibles, toys, games, china, glass, jewelry, sports and exercise equipment and bric-a-brac for its yearly tag sale, to be held on Saturday from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M. at the theater on Library Lane and also at 835 Claflin Avenue.

Clothing and electrical appliances are not acceptable, but other items in good condition may be dropped off at the theater from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M. Monday through Friday, after calling first. Arrangements can be made for picking up large furniture items by calling 698-3045. The value of contributed items is tax deductible; receipts will be issued. ■

At SUNY Purchase, Plans for G.&S. From A to Z

New Orchestra rents Theater A, the center's largest hall (unofficially renamed the Concert Hall), for its annual subscription series.

Another factor that led to the show, Mr. Beach said, was Gilbert and Sullivan's popularity. "I know people love music theater," he said, "and nobody mastered the English language for music theater better than W. S. Gilbert." Most people, however, recall either the college productions of their youth or community theater performances, he said, and have not heard Gilbert and Sullivan sung by opera professionals with a professional orchestra.

The center plans to produce "H.M.S. Pinafore" next year, and if the response is as enthusiastic as he expects, Mr. Beach said, a 10-year series lies ahead. The cost of this year's show, including the rental of costumes and scenery from the Washington Opera for "Trial by Jury," is expected to be $100,000. Future productions, which will be fully staged here, could cost twice that much since they will be mounted from scratch, Mr. Beach said. He added that the project is being financed with money raised by the volunteer Prompters group, box office sales and by a newly formed Gilbert and Sullivan Society at the college.

But the biggest challenge, Mr. Beach said, lay in capturing the wacky magic of late-19th-century British humor. He said that he, Mr. Pappas and Mr. Dunkel all agreed on the importance of getting the lyrics across.

Cable TV Show Prepared

In a phone conversation from his office in Manhattan, Mr. Pappas said he wouldn't tamper with the foolproof Gilbert and Sullivan stagings of the past. "The trick is," he said, "to retain as much of the wonderful tradition as possible and still make it feel fresh and funny."

Making things funny was also on Tony Stevenson's mind when the young tenor, who plays the fickle defendant Edwin in "Trial by Jury," arrived at Theater A with Marla Berg, the lovelorn plaintiff Angelina, to tape a television show about "An Evening of Gilbert and Sullivan" with Mr. Dunkel. The program will be seen on Mr. Dunkel's "Soundscape" series on T.C.I. Cable of Westchester (Channel 3) on Thursday at 7:30 P.M. and will be repeated for a while thereafter.

"When Gilbert and Sullivan is done very seriously and sung well, it is so much funnier, it's just hilarious," said Mr. Stevenson, a 29-year-old South Carolina native who is a member of the Metropolitan Opera's Young Artists Development Program. The singer, who was a winner of the Met's 1992 National Council Audition, said he had made his living back home by performing Gilbert and Sullivan with the Greenville Savoyards. "If you don't laugh when you sing the songs," he said, "the audience enjoys it tenfold."

Mr. Dunkel said that although he laughed "for three weeks straight" while playing the flute in the pit during the Manhattan run of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company in 1964, it was important not to exaggerate the humor. "One must let the music speak for itself," Mr. Dunkel said. "I'm approaching it as I would Mozart or Mendelssohn."

No Spoken Dialogue

The conductor recalled that Sullivan, who won the Mendelssohn Scholarship to the Royal Academy of Music in London when he was 14, was a highly respected composer of oratorios and other serious works in his time. "His dream was to write big symphonies," Mr. Dunkel said, "but nothing was up to what he did with Gilbert."

It was Gilbert himself who began the tradition of directing the operettas without burlesque. "Trial by Jury," the team's first successful collaboration, was composed, rehearsed and staged within a three-week period in 1875 and given its first New York performance later that same year.

The 40-minute opera — so-called because it is the only Gilbert and Sullivan work without spoken dialogue — spoofs British legal proceedings with a merrily unprincipled judge, an unapologetic two-timing defendant and a blatantly prejudiced jury. The characters also include a chorus of jurymen and a train of bridesmaids who accompany the jilted maiden to court.

As the "broken flower," Ms. Berg, a native of Illinois, will wear a Victorian-style satin ecru wedding dress, which needed not a stitch of alteration when she donned it for the first time in the center's costume shop. Although she said she had been performing Beethoven and Schubert masses recently, she has also had experience singing Gilbert and Sullivan, most recently as a member of the Cleveland Opera's cast of "Yeoman of the Guard."

Mr. Pappas predicted that both she and Mr. Stevenson would someday be "very important singers," and said that luckily for this show, they also have another asset. "They are tremendously well trained vocally," Mr. Pappas said. "But they are also very funny people."

For ticket information for "An Evening of Gilbert and Sullivan," the number for the Performing Arts Center box office is 251-6200.

CRAFTS

Apparel That Is Meant to Be Worn

By PATRICIA MALARCHER

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON

"ART WEAR" at the Gallery here is a show with a surprise around every corner. The title is deceptively bland; it might lead one to expect the timeless elegance of silk scarves but hardly the timely environmental suits made of grass. About 60 pieces by 21 artists reflect a broad diversity of attitudes toward the creation of objects meant to be worn. While some simply are intended to enhance the figure, others strain the limits of the theme.

Representing several Westchester residents as well as artists from as far away as New Mexico, the show was organized by Sue Fankhauser, Suzan Franz, Meredith Kent and Linda Schneiderman, members of the Gallery board. Ruth Raible of Hastings-on-Hudson, a well-known authority on contemporary crafts, served as a consultant.

Photographs from the Gallery at Hastings-on-Hudson

Although the works are presented as self-sufficient art objects, some inevitably raise the question of whether they can be appreciated fully when not being worn. Others, such as Tim Harding's kimono-shape coats, are designed to be as effective on the wall as on the body. Purposefully challenging the primacy of art divorced from use in Western culture, Mr. Harding invests his garments with a visual complexity that invites contemplation in the gallery setting.

While acknowledging many influences, including a type of slashed clothing worn during the Renaissance, Mr. Harding has developed a signature style. After quilting several layers of dyed cotton cloth, he makes linear cuts across the outer fabric to reveal the colors underneath. He then frays the edges to achieve a texture similar to pile. As the two pieces here indicate, this approach lends itself not only to geometric patterns but also to landscapes.

The kimono format is preferred by many artists because it allows a sweep of design unimpeded by tailoring requirements. For instance, across its entire lower breadth beneath the sleeves, a knitted "Turtle Coat" by Erika Baker of Yorktown Heights depicts an underwater world replete with turtles. Hewing closer to fashion design, Leni Hoch, who let the structure of the garment guide her, exhibits a graceful kimono with vertical sections of graduated length.

Not precisely a kimono, but similarly shaped, "Dead Grass Robe" by Gene Pool (the new legal name of this Brooklyn resident) provides an abrupt shift in focus from fashion to conceptual art with an environmental theme. Although from afar the piece resembles blond fur, up close its hairiness proves to be grass dried to golden yellow. Described by the artist as a "celebration of the life force," the robe was created by Mr. Pool, a performance artist, to wear as he mingles with the public in such places as municipal plazas or the subway.

Representing an earlier stage in the cycle, Mr. Pool's "Green Dead Grass Suit" was shown horizontally in a shallow box, suggestive of a mortuary viewing. Originally, the suit and the robe were ordinary inexpensive clothes. On both, Mr. Pool had spread an adhesive over which he scattered grass seed. The garments were then enclosed in plastic "greenhouses" and watered regularly until they sprouted. Mr. Pool said it takes eight months for the grass to change from green to the color of hay.

Treading a line between the straightforward elegance of Ms. Hock's garment and Mr. Pool's offbeat artistry, Lisa Nichi of Tappan exhibits a group of refreshingly original and witty accessories. For instance, there is a collection of hats shaped from stiffened black net. Some resemble traditional top hats, with contours softened by crushing; some are dramatically embellished with sweeping pheasant feathers or enormous organza flowers created by the artist.

Another, more theatrical group of hats is made like flat net envelopes in various shapes. For instance, one suggests an Ionic capital — proportioned not only to cover the head but also to extend below the nose like a veil. The show, unfortunately, cannot reveal how these imaginative works substantially alter the profile of a wearer.

Taking a playful look at art history, Debra Jacoby's painted silk "Muybridge Scarf" parodies the figure studies of the innovative 19th-century photographer Eadweard Muybridge. Randall Darwall's scarves are studies in themselves, with shifts of color and texture moving through them as subtly as changes of shadow in the course of a day.

Robert Dancik's bold pins and neck pieces, carefully wrought without being overly refined, reflect a contemporary bent toward combining nonprecious materials — for example, a shard of glass from a beach — with silver and gold. Some of his pieces incorporate enigmatic "maps" of polymer clay, which suggest encoded information. Mr. Dancik, a resident of South Salem, teaches art in the White Plains public schools and at Marymount College in Tarrytown.

Suggesting user-friendly fetishes, Thomas Mann's humorous pins are metal assemblages incorporating symbols from many different cultures — the eye and the hand, for example — in stainless-steel settings. Taking a more sophisticated view toward materials, Carly Wright has created a seamless union of silver and enamel by pushing them, respectively, toward a pewterlike gray and a soft opal finish.

An exception to the contemporary focus of the show is an assortment of purses with an Art Deco flavor contributed by Sylvia Pines, a collector and restorer of antiques. Among them is an intricately beaded "Miser's Purse" with double pockets, which, in the spirit of "form follows function," are intentionally difficult to open.

All the works, ranging from $36 for a pair of painted clay earrings to $3,600 for a coat, are for sale.

The exhibition will continue through June 13. The Gallery at Hastings-on-Hudson is in the municipal building on Maple Avenue. Hours are noon to 5 P.M., Wednesdays through Sundays. For information, the number to call is 478-4141. ■

At bedtime, Peggy Coyle, in the top bunk, reads a story to her children. After a short dose of Dr. Seuss they fell asleep.

The Importance Of Being Mom: Three Stories

By JACKIE FITZPATRICK

NICHOLAUS, who is 4 years old, wants to make creepy crawlers and he pulls lightly on his mother's leg every couple of minutes. "Maybe us can make creepy crawlers?" Peggy Coyle smiles at her son and says, "Very soon."

Katrina, 3, wants to know when she'll be having her bedtime bath. "'Cuse me. Bath time now, Mommy?" she asks her mother about 20 times. "In a little, darlin'," her mother says.

Katrina's twin sister, Alexcia, only wants to be held, so she clambers onto her mother's lap and burrows her head into her shoulder.

Meanwhile, Marrina, 6, is alternately coloring pictures and practicing cartwheels on the living room carpet.

Hugs in Demand

Larissa, 12, slips on some earphones and tries to mute the din and get some of her algebra homework done at the dining room table while Jessica, 16, has her biology homework interrupted in small blitzes as her younger sisters and brother ask her for something to drink, if she can make creepy crawlers or simply for a few hugs.

To Peggy Coyle of Milford, mother to the brood of six, it is hardly chaos, just another day winding down.

Her husband, Joseph, comes in from fixing their car and washes the black grease from his hands. He works rotating shifts at Sikorsky Aircraft and, until recently, worked two jobs.

Mothers on the Run

"Food costs more than our mortgage does each month," he said. "But, I'll tell you right now I could work two jobs six days a week and it would still be easy compared to what my wife does every day and every night. I don't know how she does it."

"None of this is work to me," Mrs. Coyle says. "This is my life and I love it. Nobody has a big family anymore and I get a lot of negative remarks from people, especially younger women who can't understand why I have so many kids. They come right out and say so. Or they'll roll their eyes and say 'God bless you.' And I'll say, 'He already did.'"

How Mrs. Coyle gets through each day and night is probably quite similar to the way two other Connecticut

A Harbor School Where Gone Fishin' Can Earn Credit

By FRED MUSANTE

WITH sure strokes, Rachel Vizner applied luminous white paint to the inside of an eight-foot dory she had built from a few pieces of wood. Around her, power tools roared and a thin haze of sawdust billowed upward to the high shed roof. "I love this school," said Ms. Vizner, a student at the Aquaculture School in Bridgeport, a regional vocational school dedicated to the study of commercial fisheries and marine trades.

Ms. Vizner, who is 18 years old and lives in Monroe, said she intended to be a teacher, a vocation that does not require a knowledge of making fishing rods, lobster pots or little rowboats like the one to which she was putting the finishing touches. But the Aquaculture School has taught her something about education.

"It's better than just staying in the classrooms," she said. "I like the hands-on stuff."

"Hands-on" is a term frequently used about the Aquaculture School, since students might get their hands on just about anything having to do with the sea, from sea horses to the wheel of a boat, an outboard motor or even a sick fish to nurse back to health.

"This is the only vocational school dedicated solely to aquaculture on the East Coast," said the Bridgeport School Superintendent, James A. Connelly, at the opening of the school's new building in March, after a six-year effort.

In its new, permanent quarters, the school — which is officially named the Bridgeport Regional Vocational Aquaculture Center — operates morning and afternoon sessions for 102 high school students from seven cities and towns. The center is expanding rapidly, adding new courses, laboratories, workshops and a larger boat, and may be able to accommodate more than 200 students by next fall.

'Farming the Sea'

Strictly speaking, aquaculture is marine agriculture, or "farming the sea" in the words of John Volk, aquaculture director for the State Department of Agriculture, though the school has a broader curriculum than that.

Fish farming and other methods of ocean harvest are taught, but so are a wide range of other subjects related to Connecticut's maritime economy. Mr. Volk noted that the recreational and commercial uses of Long Island Sound contribute $5.3 billion a year to the state's economy.

Few students at the school said they had decided on a maritime career. Rather, it was the unique curriculum and the novelty of classes conducted aboard the center's 25-foot lobster boat out on the Sound that evoked the greatest interest. But the students spoke with wide-eyed wonder of unexpected discoveries, particularly involving their first encounters with sea creatures.

Students working on a boat at the Aquaculture School with instructor Carl Poulsin.

"I never saw a sea horse before in my life," said Diego Reyes of Bridgeport. Lionel Young, also of Bridgeport, said he was fascinated by a skate, Long Island Sound's native sea ray.

A teacher, Timothy C. Visel, said the phenomenon was familiar to the staff at the school. "We call it the light bulb syndrome, where all of a sudden their interest lights up," he said.

First-year students are offered short courses, each two to three weeks long, allowing them to sample many subjects. The exploratory units, as they are called, may include assembling commercial or recreational fishing gear, or operating an oyster dredge or trawler net.

"We try to give all the students the opportunity to explore everything," Mr. Visel said. "There's no way of telling what's going to excite them."

Homework is a drudge; aquaculture is a dredge.

He added that a few students learned they were not really interested in aquaculture and dropped out, returning to full-time classes at their regular high school.

The curriculum grows more technical for second-year students, who can select courses in finfish and shellfish farming, drafting, boat design and construction, weather forecasting, marine biology or coastal navigation.

Third-year students may take more advanced studies in those areas, prepare to earn a boating license and learn how to operate a small business like a marina. The fourth-year curriculum, which will be offered for the first time next year, is an extension of the third year.

Trout Farm and 'Lighthouse'

Each student takes two courses, one in science and the other in technology. The rest of their studies, like English, math or foreign languages, are taught at their home high school.

The new building, which cost $7.5 million, has two wings housing laboratories and a trout farm on one side and technology workshops on the oth-

Men of Iwo Jima on a New Mission

By BILL RYAN

MOTORISTS on the final section of Connecticut Route 9, from Newington to Farmington, are often surprised by a sign designating it the Iwo Jima Memorial Expressway. Why Iwo Jima? And for many, no doubt, what was Iwo Jima?

The battle for Iwo Jima, late in World War II, was a horror story that can still shock with its statistics.

In little more than a month, beginning on Feb. 19, 1945, 6,800 United States servicemen, mostly marines, died in the effort to take what had been an almost unknown island, only five miles long and two miles at its widest. And more than 21,000 Japanese servicemen died trying to defend it.

Those, however, are just statistics.

The young marines who fought on Iwo Jima and survived are mostly grandfathers now. Their average age is 70 and most are retired. But when they talk about that time the horror comes alive as if 1945 had been yesterday instead of 48 years ago.

Three of the former marines from Connecticut — George G. Gentile of Canton, Edward Layman of Wallingford and John K. Conant of Norwalk — were talking about Iwo Jima one recent day.

"If there was any place like hell, that would be it," Mr. Conant said. "You could smell sulfur all over the island."

Iwo Jima means Sulfur Island in Japanese. The island was, and is, a bleak landscape of volcanic ash, from which sulfur had been mined for many years by Japanese civilians. There are no streams because water is so quickly absorbed by the spongy black ash.

When Mr. Conant went ashore, one of his first sights was a destroyed half-track with the seared trunk of a man on it. No legs. No head. Just the trunk. "After that, you got hardened to what you were going to see," he said.

The marines landed in waves, day after day, on the black sand at the south end of the island. Hundreds got no farther than a few feet before they were killed or wounded.

Mr. Layman was scheduled to land at noon. "But the beach was so chaotic with killed and wounded that I didn't go until 10 at night," he said. "It was incredible. The Japanese were using mortars from several hundred feet in back of the beach and artillery behind that, and rockets."

Killing Field Not Expected

Mr. Gentile went ashore as an infantry replacement and spent part of the first night dug in under a disabled tank with a buddy. When the exploding shells came too close, they both ran blindly to any place that looked safer. Mr. Gentile's friend was killed that night, literally blown apart. "They only found his dog tags," Mr. Gentile said.

What happened at Iwo Jima was the more horrifying because the marines who fought there had expected, if not an easy invasion, certainly not the killing field it would become.

Weeks before, three Marine divisions had been loaded aboard ships from Hawaii and Guam. A week before the invasion was to begin, they were told where they were going. Iwo

A Village Senses the Loss of a Hero Long Held as Its Own

By FRANCES CHAMBERLAIN

CORNWALL became the final resting place for a young Hawaiian man 175 years ago, but if his family can find a way, his remains, and the tombstone under which they have rested for nearly two centuries, will be returned to Hawaii, at last, before the summer is through.

Henry Obookiah was born and raised in Hawaii, but in 1807, when he was 15, he swam out to the ship Triumph, anchored in Kealakekua Bay, and signed on as a cabin boy.

Sometime later, local legend maintains, he was found on the steps of Yale College, crying because he thought he had no chance of ever receiving an education. He was then befriended by the president of Yale, and his plight attracted the sympathy of the members of the Congregational Church. A school, the Foreign Mission School, was established, first in Morris, and later in Cornwall, with the expressed purpose of "educating heathens."

Prejudice Closes School

According to the Cornwall town historian, Michael Gannett, Cornwall became the host of the missionary effort, and for a time the Foreign Mission School put Cornwall on the map. Eventually the school was closed because of racial prejudice; two Cherokee Indians married Cornwall women and the ensuing uproar signaled the demise of the school.

Henry Obookiah, who received his education as a result of the efforts of the Congregationalists, died from typhus on Feb. 17, 1818, and was buried in the Cornwall cemetery.

But it is said that before he died he became the first Hawaiian to convert to Christianity, became a student of English, Greek and Hebrew, and translated the Christian scriptures into Hawaiian. According to an account of his life written by his friend, Edwin Dwight, Mr. Obookiah fervently embraced his new religion and appealed for help in ridding his homeland of "idol worshiping."

Beecher Preached at Funeral

In a recent history written by the Rev. Edith H. Wolfe of the Hawaii Conference of the United Church of Christ, Mr. Obookiah "died in the parsonage of the Congregational Church, with the minister and his wife caring for him, and his Hawaiian fellows around him. The whole of New England wept at his death at the age of 26. From nearby Litchfield a famous preacher, Dr. Lyman Beecher, came to preach at his funeral."

After his death, Edwin Dwight's book, "Memoirs of Henry Obookiah," traveled throughout New England. Within two years of his death, the Congregational Church had chartered the brig Thaddeus to carry the first company of missionaries, and four of Mr. Obookiah's Hawaiian friends, to Hawaii.

"This was all sparked, in large part, by the story of Henry Obookiah," explained Mr. Gannett. In a recent article in The Cornwall Chronicle, Mr. Gannett wrote, "Though Obookiah did not live to return to his homeland, he is regarded by many as Hawaii's first Christian and as an important symbol of the bridge between the island's native culture and Christianity."

Miss Wolfe's account adds: "Henry Obookiah's was the face — and the faith — that launched that ship. In the years that followed 1820, many other missionary ships sailed from New England to Hawaii, bringing education, schools, churches, music, architecture, art, medicine. It is not too much to say that Henry Obookiah, the young man who lies buried in Cornwall Village Cemetery, changed the course of Hawaii's history."

In 1968, on the 150th anniversary of Mr. Obookiah's death, six Hawaiian pilgrims traveled to Connecticut to place 1,000 leis on his grave. At the same time, in Hawaii, thousands of people attended two special observances, one in Kealakekua, on the shore of the bay from which Mr. Obookiah departed, and one in Kawaiahao Church. After these ceremonies, the Hawaiian Visitors Bureau decided to donate a warrior marker for the Cornwall gravesite. This was a "coveted honor," according to Miss Wolfe, and the only one of its kind to be granted outside of the Hawaiian islands.

Support for the Return

Today, the marker remains in the Cornwall Historical Society, "lest it be stolen from the grave's isolated location," Mr. Gannett said. But a recently formed family association and members of the Hawaii Conference of the Church of Christ have put into motion the process by which Mr. Obookiah, his marker and gravestone, could be returned to the islands for good.

When the marker was delivered, Mr. Gannett said: "it created a brouhaha in Cornwall. We have a sign law in our zoning regulations and the Zoning Board turned down the cemetery request. The Zoning Board of Appeals sustained the turndown, and that caused a lot of hurt feelings in Hawaii. They thought that they were doing something noble for both Hawaii and for Cornwall."

Whether or not the issue of the sign has anything to do with the family's efforts to move the grave is unclear, but the village of Cornwall has been sympathetic to the current interest in returning Mr. Obookiah's remains to Hawaii, Mr. Gannett said.

"Most people with time and roots in the community feel that Obookiah is part of our history, too," he said. "But at a gathering here at the Congregational Church to discuss this issue, not many people came. Judging by the tenor of the meeting most of those present felt that if this is what the closest of his kin want, then so be it — some, possibly, with regret."

Don Heiny for The New York Times

It is unclear just where the movement to reinter Mr. Obookiah began. Liikapeka Lee, of Seattle, a Hawaiian native and descendent of Mr. Obookiah's grandparents, formed a family association, and with her cousin David Hirano, a minister of the United Church of Christ Connecticut Conference, have been leading efforts in the United States.

An article in The Star Bulletin and Advertiser of Honolulu in February explained that Miss Lee hoped to complete the process by Aug. 7. She has obtained support for her campaign through signed affidavits of many family members five and six generations removed from Mr. Obookiah, and she has contacted airline officials on the cost of shipping the remains, dealt with funeral officials in three states and obtained permission from Connecticut church leaders.

Reinterring a 175-year-old grave is not a simple process, Mr. Gannett said. When the request is formally made, it will be submitted to the town clerk, the sexton of the cemetery, the Torrington area health district and the board of the cemetery, he said. "Obookiah is said to have died of typhus fever, and although he died 175 years ago, it's required that disturbing his remains must not create any health hazard," he said. "Then, of course, we don't even know exactly what the remains are in the grave."

The man who changed the course of Hawaii's history is going home.

Weathered, Inscribed Slab

Miss Lee is also interested in obtaining the large, flat slab that lies on top of the raised, field masonry stone grave with its heavily weathered inscription.

Though the village of Cornwall appears to support the idea of moving Mr. Obookiah's remains to his native land, it is not without a sense of loss, Mr. Gannett added.

"For years there have been groups and individuals coming to visit this site," he said. "Sometimes they're sizable delegations. They frequently decorate the gravesite with a little soil, sea water, floral wreathes. A couple of weeks ago, I looked up there and saw something hanging over the side of the monument, so someone has been there again recently."

He said that because Mr. Obookiah is part of Cornwall's history, he hoped that the village would retain some type of memorial. ■

Connecticut Q&A: Dr. Ron Miller

Helping Families With Aging Relatives

By JULIE MILLER

CARING for an aging relative has become a common experience in family life, and the disabilities associated with aging have profound effects on the family as well as the elderly loved ones they care for.

The Dorothy Adler Geriatric Assessment Center at Yale-New Haven Hospital was started in 1981 as a volunteer program by Nanne Scholhamer, now the center's social worker, and Dr. Andrea Schaffner, who was then working at the hospital on a fellowship in geriatrics.

In starting their program, Ms. Scholhamer and Dr. Schaffner were responding to a problem they found was not unique to New Haven. In many other communities as well, a growing number of families were finding the burden of caring for an aging parent or spouse greater than they could manage, said Dr. Ron Miller, the program's medical director since 1983.

"They would see older persons dropped off at the emergency room," Dr. Miller said, "often with the care givers unable to cope, totally exhausted, with a whole host of things which made them seek a less than desirable method of dealing with the problem."

A paid staff for the program was hired in 1986. Two years later, the staff moved into a center for geriatric assessment, where older people and their families receive help with the medical, psychological and social problems of aging. Similar programs have sprung up around the nation, Dr. Miller said.

The staff members at the Adler Center recommend a treatment plan for the elderly patient and help the family resolve the everyday problems brought on by caring for an older person. Resources in the community — like family doctors, day care centers for adults and home-health agencies — are found that can provide support.

Dr. Miller discussed the Adler Center and its work during an interview at Yale-New Haven Hospital. Here are excerpts from that conversation.

Q. How would you describe the Adler Center's mission in providing care to older people and their families?

A. Our work with a patient by the name of Dorothy Adler, who was always accompanied by her two sons and daughters-in-law, was the pivotal event in the development of a Dorothy Adler Geriatric Assessment Center. At the time of her death, her family wanted to see the services we provided to them expanded and made available to this community.

Our mission was a pretty clear-cut one: To assess and develop a plan for the patient and give support to the care giver, which is in many ways inseparable. There are actually two patients.

Q. How are older people and their families referred to the center?

A. The most common way at the outset was by word of mouth. One family had an experience here and talked to a neighbor or friend. As the years go by and we work more with community physicians, adult day care centers and others, more of our referrals come from these sources. It's about 50-50 at this point.

One of the things we say when someone calls us is that we consider ourselves an adjunct to the patient's primary physician. We ask them to notify the physician and to get us the patient's records so we can understand his history.

Carl David LaBianca for The New York Times

Q. What is the difference between the Adler Center and a private practice?

A. The case manager, who may be a social worker or a nurse with a master's degree, plays a pivotal role in the services we provide. We split up the responsibilities between a physician, a registered nurse and a case manager.

Sometimes care-giving issues are most crucial. In other situations, medical or nursing issues may be more important. We distribute those responsibilities among that team of three.

Q. What are the typical problems of older persons treated at the center?

A. Between 70 and 80 percent of all the people who come here have some problem with memory. Some experience visual-spatial disorientation, which involves an awareness of the body's place in relation to the space around it. Others have difficulty with language or decision making, disorganized thought, hallucinations or delusions. These are sometimes linked to the memory loss or may be separate. They may be associated with Alzheimer's disease, stroke or short-term memory loss.

Additional problems include depression, immobility, problems with falls and incontinence. We will soon be able to treat movement disorders here. We also see families simply trying to make some decisions about their own roles as care givers.

There is another category of people who are just declining. Families ask why it is that mom or dad can't do what they did five years ago. They want to know if there's something we can do to slow or stop the decline. It's not an easy question, because it is hard to ferret out what is aging and what is disease.

The staff at the center includes two case managers, one registered nurse, two psychiatrists and eight internists. Soon there will be a neurologist. These people are specialists in the care of older people.

Q. What is included, specifically, in a patient's treatment plan?

A. First, we identify a patient's deficits and strengths. Then, we develop a plan that includes medication and arrangements for care. But we don't provide long-term management. We will say to the family, "Right now, things look fine. But they may change. We are ready to get involved again in a month or a year." That is, in fact, what happens. We will see some people frequently at first and then may not see them for six months, a year or two years.

Q. How often must a patient visit the center?

A. The average is two visits. But many people come for only one, because that's all they need.

Q. Who is eligible for the center's services?

A. Anybody is eligible whom we think we can help. Patients tend to be over age 75. But the age is less important than the situation.

Insurance is a problem under age 65, because insurance companies have a hard time, understandably, grappling with the 45-year-old with a diagnosis of dementia, or loss or impairment of mental ability. That's not something they see very much, that's not something they know how to respond to. And they're not accustomed to dealing with the concept of case management by a team of people. Medicare will cover 80 percent of the cost, and most Medigap policies cover the rest.

Q. What type of support do family members need?

A. A whole range of supports, from someone to listen and tell them that what they're doing is correct, to a plan and gentle reinforcement of that plan. Let's take the example of a grandchild caring for a grandmother. The granddaughter may be 40 years old. She may have four children ranging in age from 5 to 15. Typically, the care givers are women. Not only do they have all the responsibilities for their children, but they are often working full time. They may also be caring for a mother or mother-in-law. When they come to the center, they are under tremendous stress.

A place like Adler Center is crucial as we look toward our aging society. Yes, there are family values that have to deal with parents and children. But a huge issue that has not gained the same national prominence is family values concerning older people and developing a system of health care that serves care givers and older persons. From a quarter to a third of all employees in major corporations have care responsibilities for older people. The impact on corporations is great. The impact on society is great. It's hard to measure the cost, but the cost is huge.

We know that between now and the year 2050 we are going to see a rapid increase in the number of people over age 85. The demographers give us statistics that range from a growth of 600 percent to over 1,000 percent. Whatever those numbers might be, they demonstrate an unbelievable demand for services in a group of elderly people that seems large now but will grow at a much faster rate than the growth of the overall society.

The number of people with Alzheimer's disease in New Haven County alone varies between 12,000 to 15,000. There are probably 60,000 in Connecticut. The numbers will grow rapidly, with the most rapid growth not occurring until after the year 2010.

Q. Are there other images that we need to correct when thinking about older people?

A. There is the image of the bumbling, inept 90-year-old. I must admit that as I sit with some 90-year-olds, I feel rather bumbling and inept myself when I listen to the stories of their lives and their activities. However, that image is hard to break, because by sheer numbers, there are more 90-year-olds than 40-year-olds with memory problems. But aging does not mean someone cannot be active and vibrant. We are familiar with the 80-year-old who can't remember his way but there are many, many more 80- and 90-year-olds who are out doing things and having an excellent life. ■

Protections Debated For Abortion Clinics

By ABBY MARGOLIS NEWMAN

LAST year, despite the election of a President who supports abortion rights and the Supreme Court's upholding of Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision legalizing abortion, the abortion rights battle in this country is far from settled.

Abortion rights advocates realize that their gains are hanging by a tenuous thread. Anti-abortion protests in the last few years have run from picketing to bomb threats to arson to clinic blockades. They reached a new height in Pensacola, Fla., in March when Dr. David Gunn was shot and killed outside the abortion clinic where he worked by a protester who belonged to Rescue America, an anti-abortion organization.

Connecticut is far from immune to this trend. The Summit Women's Center in Bridgeport has reported clinic invasions, destruction of property, even a "skunk bomb" explosion that caused patients and staff members to be hospitalized. In the last year, the center reported that at least one patient a day was blocked by a protester from entering.

In several other towns, including Danbury, Hartford, New Haven, Norwich and Stamford, protesters have invaded clinics, chained themselves to one another and to doors, surrounded buildings and prevented patients from entering. In many cases, the clinics were forced to close temporarily.

Abortion-rights advocates, including the State Attorney General, the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union and several members of the General Assembly, have proposed legislation that would make it a crime to block access to any clinic or other medical center that provides abortion services. The bill would impose penalties of up to two years in prison and fines of up to $5,000 for clinic obstruction. Medical providers would also have the right to seek court-ordered injunctions against groups who blockade clinics and be able to seek compensatory damages.

Clinic Raided Twice

The clinic administrator at the Summit Medical Center in Hartford, Norma Aresti, said that many women blocked from entering clinics by anti-abortion protesters were not there for abortions, but were seeking other health care services.

"In 1989, we were invaded twice by Operation Rescue," she said, speaking of an anti-abortion group. "The second time, about 200 of them managed to get onto the medical floor and destroy medical equipment. We couldn't see patients all day."

The executive director of Planned Parenthood of Connecticut, Patricia Baker, said, "We have a history in this state of invasions that have been trivialized by authorities." She contended that state trespassing laws had been only sporadically enforced, if enforced at all, at abortion clinics.

"Basically, we expected the criminal system to work for us, and instead arrests were not made or, if they were, charges were dropped," she said. "It sends a message that this is not taken seriously."

State Senator George Jepsen of Stamford, a Democrat who is a ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, helped write the clinic access bill, which was approved by the committee and is now awaiting action by the General Assembly. He said that trespass laws in Connecticut "were proving ineffective — they weren't directed toward organized, paramilitary groups like Operation Rescue."

But another ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Representative Dale Radcliffe, Republican of Trumbull, disagreed contending that existing laws — "assault, trespassing, criminal mischief, unlawful restraint" — were adequate. "All we need is for state's attorneys to enforce these laws," he said.

Mike Lawlor, a Democratic Representative from East Haven, who supports the bill, said: "The difference is that all the existing laws are misdemeanors. Our bill would make it a felony to block access to clinics; we feel this would be a much stronger deterrent to the kind of criminal activity anti-abortion protesters engage in every day. The system takes much more seriously crimes that are classified as felonies."

For abortion rights supporters, the issue is clear: abortion is still legal in the United States, and any attempt to block a woman from obtaining an abortion is an illegal infringement of her constitutional right to choose. For opponents of abortion, the bill is an attempt to deprive anti-abortion protesters of their First Amendment right to free speech.

"We oppose the bill because we feel it will have a serious, chilling effect on free speech on the part of people who are pro-life," said the Rev. Thomas Barry, executive director of the Connecticut Catholic Conference in Hartford. "We don't condone violence in any manner, shape or form on the behalf of the principle of the sacredness of life. But we'll always defend the rights of peaceful protest as constitutionally protected speech."

Supporters of the bill say that free speech would not be limited, since the bill restricts itself to conduct and specifically exempts speech. JoNel Newman, staff attorney at the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union and an author of the bill, acknowledged that speech-related activities of anti-abortion groups, no matter how upsetting they might be to abortion rights supporters, were fully protected by the First Amendment.

"There are lots of things the bill doesn't address that are problematic, offensive and probably do affect women's ability to exercise their rights, such as shouting and picketing," she said. "But what is addressed in this bill is physical obstruction, which is not protected speech."

Aside from the free speech question, opponents of the bill assert that some of its language is vague and ill-defined. The vice president of the Connecticut Right to Life Corporation, Fred Walters of Cos Cob, said that the term "obstruct" was open-ended. "If I'm talking to someone outside a clinic and holding a piece of literature, would I be an obstruction?" he asked.

Father Barry concurred: "Do you deserve two years in prison or a $5,000 fine for stepping in front of someone and saying, 'Read this pamphlet'? I don't think so."

Ms. Newman said that the accusations of vagueness were unfounded and that numerous existing state statutes used identical language. "While the opponents purport not to understand what the words 'block' or 'obstruct' mean, these and similar words appear in numerous statutes, including the recently enacted hunter harassment law," she said.

The hunter harassment law, which is intended to protect hunters from being obstructed by animal-rights activists, prohibits "obstruction" or "interference" with hunters. State Senator Jepsen said these terms had become vague only in the eyes of abortion opponents, including those in the legislature, because they fundamentally oppose the principle of legal abortion. "They're willing to protect poor, defenseless hunters against animal rights activists, but since we're talking about a woman's right to choose, for some reason they won't accord women that same protection," he said.

Another argument raised by those opposing the bill is that it is unfair because it singles out a particular class of people for prosecution. "What we have here is an attempt to enshrine political correctness in the law," Mr. Radcliffe said. "We are creating a 'thought crime' — it's an attempt to punish those who disagree with ideas, because it only applies to a certain category of demonstrators, it only applies to certain conduct."

Father Barry agreed, saying, "You can't single out a particular group of people who are motivated by a nonpolitically correct idea."

But Ms. Newman maintained, "The legislature routinely singles out particular types of conduct in civil and criminal statutes based on the needs of the population at any given time." She cited the Ku Klux Klan Act, approved by Congress in 1875, which was intended to protect black people from being blocked from voting booths by the Klan.

In January, the Supreme Court determined that the act's legal premise could no longer be used to protect women entering health clinics. This decision, Ms. Newman said, became the main impetus behind the drafting of the clinic access bill.

Mr. Jepsen noted that the practice of prosecuting an individual or group for intent to deprive someone of his or her constitutional rights was standard procedure in the law. One example, he said, is Connecticut's hate crimes law, which, like the clinic access bill, talks about the perpetrator's "specific intent to intimidate or harass another person."

Double Standard Charged

Mr. Jepsen charged that there was a double standard among legislators who supported the hate crimes bill and now opposed the clinic access bill. "These two bills have the exact same principle," he said. "The fact that a specific group is being singled out for protection is nothing new. Not once, when we were discussing the hate crimes bill in the legislature, did any of these anti-choice legislators raise the free speech issue. People protecting hunters never talked about free speech."

Jayne Tuller, a spokeswoman for the Pro-Life Action Network, sees the bill as a "slippery slope" that will erode the rights of abortion opponents.

"This is the first step to taking away every single one of our First Amendment rights," she said. "It's not going to end here. These people better protect pro-life people, because pretty soon their rights are going to go right down the drain with ours."

Attorney General Richard Blumenthal, one of the bill's authors, said: "What's at stake is the effective exercise of the right of choice, because physical obstruction prevents a woman from seeking the service that enables her to make that choice. The reason for this bill is not just one murder in Florida; there is an organized campaign of terrorism and physical interference that has been on the rise in Connecticut and around the country." ■

Fresh Air Fund Families Prepare for New Season

By JACKIE FITZPATRICK

VERLIN BROWN spends much of his summer shooting hoops on the asphalt playgrounds around his Brooklyn apartment. "Mostly I just play basketball, there's nothing else to do," he said.

The days become hot and long and heavy. So he starts counting down until mid-July when he heads to the Phelan family's home in New Canaan for two weeks of swimming, fishing, soaring high on the swings, cooking out and rolling in the soft green grass. "It's fun to go there; they take me to all kinds of places," he said. "We went white-water rafting, to Martha's Vineyard. Just to be with them is good."

For the last five summers, Verlin has been spending two weeks with Bill and Pat Phelan and their five children as part of the Fresh Air Fund program. "Every summer it takes him maybe 10 minutes to settle in and then he's down in the basement with the kids or running up to get something from the fridge or going over to see the kids next door," Mrs. Phelan said. "I can't ever imagine him not coming for a summer. He's become part of our family."

While he said he particularly liked the special trips the family has taken him on over the years, Verlin said the best part was simply waking up in the Phelan's house and riding bikes down to the local school on tree-lined streets. Verlin loves to dig into Mrs. Phelan's cooking, especially spaghetti and sauce. "My kids'll say 'Ooh, I don't want that,' whatever it is I'm cooking, and Verlin will eat everything in sight," Mrs. Phelan said. "He's just a great kid. He's well-behaved; he's a lot of fun."

A Face on the Cake

Verlin bunks in each summer with Billy Phelan. Both are 11 and they share a passion for sports, one that sends them into long games of one-on-one and some serious competition — be it comparing dives at the pool or seeing who can swim the fastest, throw the farthest or sink the most free throws. "Usually he wants to play basketball because he's better than me," Billy said.

Verlin has also quickly come to know the rhythms of daily life at the Phelans and the personalities of Bill and Pat, of Mary Pat, 16, Katie, 15, Peggy, 14, Billy and Jack, 2. Jack wasn't around when Verlin first started as a Fresh Air Fund child. "But he was rooting for a boy, when he figured things would finally be even around here," Pat laughed.

Verlin is such a part of the household that at Mr. Phelan's birthday party last year, the cake was decorated with all of the children done up in icing — Verlin included.

The family decided to become involved in the program after members of the local women's league sponsored Fresh Air Fund children and Mrs. Phelan saw "the wonderful experiences they had."

"We just felt this is something we should do," Mrs. Phelan said. "We're very fortunate to have what we have and we thought this might be a way to share something with someone else. People wonder does it really help to take a child for two weeks and then send him right back into a tough or impoverished environment and I'd have to say the answer is yes. I think he knows that there is this whole family here that cares very much about him. And I think it opens doors. It shows children possibilities."

Reared by Grandparents

The first summer the Phelans sponsored another boy but that was not as good a fit, said Mr. Phelan, a Stamford-based attorney. Then Verlin arrived the following summer. Verlin lives in a small apartment in Brooklyn with his grandparents. His older brother had already been participating in the Fresh Air Fund, visiting a New Canaan family, then his sister and his cousin became part of the Fresh Air Fund program and also went to families in New Canaan. "It's easiest for their grandmother to have them all in the same area," Mrs. Phelan said.

Mrs. Phelan has since become the chairwoman for the program's Friendly Town Committee, which encourages families to participate. "We still need host families in Connecticut," she said. "We always need families. So many children want to spend a couple weeks in the country."

Children who participate in the Fresh Air Fund are 6 to 12 years old. About 60 percent of the children are like Verlin, invited back year after year by the same family. More than 1.6 million disadvantaged children in New York City have been participating in the program since 1877, all of them are from low-income families. This summer about 7,200 children will visit volunteer host families on the East Coast and in Canada. About 2,500 more will attend Fresh Air Fund camps.

"We've gotten as much out of this as Verlin has," Mr. Phelan said. "My kids have learned from Verlin, how he wants to take advantage of everything set before him here. They see how much they have and they see how little he has but how much heart he has."

Peggy Phelan added, "We'll say 'how boring' when it's time to go to the pool and he'll be so excited. He just can't wait. Even going over to the school is a real big deal for him."

Some of the children might never have heard the sound of crickets or seen a lightning bug or sunk their bare feet into warm pink sand before they participated in the program. For Verlin, the first new experience was using the club pool. Sure, he told the family, he loved to swim. That first summer day at the club he watched the others dive off the board and into the pool, then he got up on the board, "did quite a good dive right off — the first one in his life — and then we all found out he couldn't swim," Mrs. Phelan said. "The lifeguard had to go right in after him."

Soon enough though, Verlin was right in there with the rest of the crowd. He developed a good game of tennis and, on one of his frequent visits to the Phelans at other times of the year, he learned to ice skate. "He's one scrappy kid, he can play any sport," Mr. Phelan said. "You see him and you start to think about how totally unfair things are, about how much more he has to fight for his chance than my kids do. It makes you want to do so much more for him."

While all that is required of a host family is to provide an inner-city child with two weeks' vacation in their home, many families become more involved. The Phelans invite Verlin up for Thanksgiving and several other times during the year. They send him a gift on his birthday and at Christmas — this year it was rollerblades.

"We know some families who take the child for the whole summer and another family that wanted to pay to place the children into private school in New York because they lived in such an unsafe place," Mrs. Phelan said. "But you don't have to do any of that as a host family. You just have to open your house and your family to the child."

Interested families may contact the Fresh Air Fund at (800) 367-0003. "We can accept families through June," Mrs. Phelan said.

Verlin's visit may be some time away but Billy said he couldn't wait to see him. "I always like it when he's here," he said.

Each summer Mrs. Phelan snaps a pile of pictures and also buys some disposable cameras for Verlin so he can add to his own photo album that he keeps in his apartment back home. It's chock full of memories and good times: there's the picture of Verlin holding the fish he snagged when he visited with Billy's grandparents one summer and the one of Verlin floating on a rubber raft and the one swimming at the Vineyard. And don't forget that one snapshot, of a cake slathered in icing and decorated with five children and baby Jack in the carriage, with Verlin right there in the thick of things, part of the family. "I loved that cake," he said. ■

Jima was used as an air base for Japanese fighter planes, operating against American bombers trying to reach Japan, and was the last major strategic obstacle to winning the battle of the Pacific. It had to be taken.

The United States assembled one of the mightiest armadas in history for the invasion. When Feb. 19 dawned, it was an awesome sight, Mr. Gentile said. "There were ships as far as you could see, 750 of them," he said. "It lessened fear. No one could survive this we thought."

What met them, however, was an opposing force that had dug into the sand of the island and into caves at the northern end and was determined not to surrender. Unlike other islands held by the Japanese, Iwo Jima, 650 miles from the Japanese mainland, was part of the Japanese empire before the war. And the Japanese troops on the island would defend it to the death of nearly all of them.

The only visible hope for the invaders during the terrible first week was the raising of the American flag atop Mount Suribachi, a 546-foot volcano that loomed over the men fighting below.

Survivors of the World War II battle hope to keep the memory alive.

The picture of the flag raising would become the best known photograph of World War II and would win a Pulitzer Prize for Joe Rosenthal, an Associated Press photographer. Three of the six men in the photograph were not so fortunate. They would be killed before the invasion was over. A sculpture based on the photograph became the Marine Corps war memorial in Washington.

High Price for Connecticut

Men who survived Iwo Jima eventually came home and resumed their lives. Many went to college on the G.I. Bill. Mr. Gentile became a dentist and Mr. Conant a lawyer. Mr. Layman, a telephone lineman in the Marines, laughs about what followed. "I became a lineman when I got out."

Several years ago, Mr. Gentile went to a meeting in New York for men who had survived the battle for Iwo Jima. It bothered him that Connecticut, which lost 96 men in the invasion, a figure out of proportion to the state's population, did nothing to perpetuate the memory of those who fought on the island, particularly those who died there.

In 1987 he formed an organization called the Iwo Jima Survivors Association of Connecticut and 24 men showed up at the first meeting. Today it is said to be the only formal organization in the country for men who served in the invasion, and its membership has outgrown the state. Mr. Gentile, the group's perennial president, said that members now totaled 425, with 266 from Connecticut. Others come from as far south as Florida and as far west as Oklahoma. One member lives in Nova Scotia.

In a quiet way, the association has made its presence felt, pushing for a gubernatorial proclamation identifying each Feb. 23, the day of the flag raising, as Iwo Jima Day of Remembrance in Connecticut and, most noticeably, winning dedication of the Iwo Jima Memorial Expressway last Sept. 30.

The association has commissioned a monumental sculpture of the flag raising to be placed off the highway on land donated by Central Connecticut State University. The statuary, now being formed in New Jersey, will cost $200,000. Members of the association have so far raised about half that amount.

Inspiration for the Young

Mr. Gentile says the remainder will be raised somehow and the statue will be in place for the 50th anniversary of the invasion on Feb. 19, 1995.

Iwo Jima, he said, was the turning point for the war in the Pacific but was not without an incredible cost. "For eight square miles, we lost 6,800 men in 36 days and 32 men received the Congressional Medal of Honor there." For those reasons, to honor the sacrifices made on the island, the statue is a worthwhile cause, he said.

"But most of all," Mr. Gentile said, "as we got older, if we mentioned Iwo Jima, young people didn't know what it was or what happened there." He hopes the statue along the road, depicting one moment in history, will inspire them to find out. ■

Emily's parents couldn't agree on the wallpaper, but choosing the right birthing center was easy.

When Emily's parents decided it was time to start a family, they had important decisions to make. They had to choose a doctor and a birthing center. We're pleased to say, they chose us.

Emily's pleased, too. She weighed just a little over two pounds at birth and needed the highly specialized care and expertise of our neonatal staff. With this care, a high-risk delivery became a highly successful one.

Fortunately, most births are not high-risk. We're committed to ensuring a healthy outcome for mother and baby, regardless of the ease or difficulty of delivery. Our staff includes obstetricians, pediatricians and pediatric specialists in areas ranging from neonatology to urology. Our nurses are all specially trained in labor, delivery, neonatal and post-partum care. We also offer seminars on nutrition, prenatal care, feeding and caring for your newborn, and more. But above all, we provide babies and their parents with highly personalized maternity care in a warm, comforting environment.

The Importance of Being Mom: 3 Stories

women recently interviewed, Claudia Grantham and Lisa Paterson, get through their days and nights.

Gale Zucker for The New York Times

Mother of Six

Revisiting the Era Of the Big Family

Mrs. Coyle's days start at 5 A.M. when Nicholaus runs into her room and says he has to use the bathroom. "Kids know that's the one line that will get a parent right out of bed," she laughs. Shortly after he is up, comes the patter of his two younger sisters.

On a given day, Mrs. Coyle might flip 20 pancakes for breakfast, make almost a dozen sandwiches for various lunchboxes and cook a huge pot of pasta for dinner, wash five loads of clothes, braid and bow at least three different heads of hair, sing songs, sew a couple of outfits, vacuum to some loud rock-and-roll, play games and drive her children here, there and everywhere after school.

Today Mrs. Coyle will enjoy at least a partial day of rest. Her children may do the usual burnt breakfast in bed routine or present her with trinkets they've purchased, or maybe they'll take her out to dinner.

"I appreciate all my Mom does for me," Jessica said. "A lot of my friends' Moms work and they're never home and my Mom is always there for me — always. And she's a lot of fun."

"She's funny," adds Larissa, then she goes back to her homework. Jessica notes, however, that she won't have so many children when she grows up. "I want a career, probably in medicine," she said.

Her mother says, "I think that's great."

Drawing and Sewing to Relax

Life at the Coyles is a kind of step back in time, to another era of motherhood, when women did not have to dash out the door to take a meeting or do lunch. Doing lunch at the Coyles means sitting down with the children to peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. Mrs. Coyle is not a stickler for bedtimes but she insists on appropriate table manners and behavior. She pulls out a pile of photographs of Halloween costumes she has made for the children: mermaids, Gumby, Little Miss Muffet with a pull-along tuffet, all looking like they came from a costume shop. On each child's birthday she paints a picture for the birthday child's wall.

At the moment there are no walls upstairs because the family is in the midst of building an addition to the house. "We were bursting out at the seams before," she said. "I want the kids to have their own rooms, even if they're tiny little rooms, so they have a place to call their own."

At night, Mrs. Coyle does quick drawings for the three who go to school and puts them in their lunch bags. "I relax at night by drawing or sewing clothes," she said.

Mr. Coyle, who now has several children climbing into his lap, said he loves his wife's artistry. "She doesn't have the confidence she should but she's a true artist," he said. "She could do it for a living and I encourage her along those lines."

What If?

Mrs. Coyle said she was very satisfied with the life she had chosen but she mentioned a friend of hers who went to art school and traveled around the world. "Every once in a while I wonder what it would have been like to go to art school but my mother wasn't like that, she didn't believe in it at the time," she said. "Every now and then I wonder for a minute about my friend's life, but she has been trying to have kids and hasn't had one yet. And I often think I can always have a job but I couldn't always have had these kids."

Mrs. Coyle said she eventually plans to return to work, perhaps teaching gymnastics again or doing something in the art field, particularly to help pay for her children's college tuition. "My girls are working very hard toward that goal of college," she said. "They do well in school. They play sports and are involved in extra-curricular activities. I want them to go after what they want — all my kids — whatever it is," she said.

Mrs. Coyle takes stock of her family, spilling out of all corners of her living room. She scoops up one of the twins and says: "We don't have much money or anything but how do you measure success? I'm happy, my husband is happy and our kids are happy. To me that's success."

Sandwich Generation

Nurturing Young And the Old

Every couple of days, Claudia Grantham of New Haven takes a stack of flowery housedresses and washes, dries and presses them. Then she carries them on hangers to her mother. "I want the clothes fresh and pretty just like how I know she would have done them," Mrs. Grantham said. "She's a dignified beautiful woman and I want her to look pretty." She slips the dresses into the closet at the Arden House nursing home in Hamden and walks down the hall to her mother, Julia Snyder, who is seated in a wheelchair in the dining room.

"Mommy, hello. Hello, Mommy," Mrs. Grantham says and squats down to eye level with her 83-year-old-mother. At first her mother doesn't seem to see her. She has Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases and she pulls on her fingers in front of her face, over and over again.

"How are you doing today, Mom?" Mrs. Grantham asks and for a brief moment, Mrs. Snyder's eyes light up and she gives her daughter a smile. "Those are the moments that I wait for, the moments that count," Mrs. Grantham says.

Mrs. Grantham visits her mother several times a week, heading to the nursing home after putting in a full day as a vice principal at North Haven Middle School, taking her 13-year-old son Christopher to lacrosse practice, making dinner and eating with her son and her husband, Ron.

When Mrs. Grantham arrives, she sits down in front of her mother and just starts talking, dropping tidbits of information about Christopher, about her day at school, about what's happening in the world. Sometimes her mother simply makes sounds.

"Yes, Mama, you're right about that," her daughter says. So her daughter continues her one-way conversation, all the while gently stroking her mother's arm. "Sometimes I think if only she could talk to me, give me some of her great advice," Mrs. Grantham said. "I don't know if she understands what I say, but sometimes I'll get this glimmer and I think she does. I think she knows I'm not a nurse, that I'm someone special to her. She loves having people around. She needs the stimulus. That's why being with her is so important. She is getting something from it."

Mrs. Grantham can remember getting the first phone call that changed things. "My mother called me and said, "I'm out driving in my car and I don't know where I'm going. I don't know where I am. I don't know what time it is."

Long-Distance Emergency

While Mrs. Grantham was at her home in New Haven, her mother was in Los Angeles. She kept her mother on the phone, running through the streets in her mind, trying to figure out where she could be, while her husband called the Los Angeles police to try to find her.

It happened three times, until Mrs. Grantham flew to Los Angeles so her mother could undergo medical tests. "I thought it was because my father had died and she was just going through something," Mrs. Grantham said. "My mother was 72 years old at the time but she'd always been as sharp as a tack, so, so vital."

Eventually, orchestrating her care from another coast grew too difficult. Mrs. Grantham and her sister, Sandy, both of whom were adopted when their mother was in her 40's, talked about who should become the caretaker. "My sister is a single mother living out in Oregon and it just made sense that I would bring Mom here," she said.

Mrs. Grantham and her husband talked at length about the decision. "He was and still is amazingly supportive," she said. First she moved her mother into their home, and eventually they bought a home for her. Her sister later moved with her two daughters from Oregon to Hamden to care for their mother during the day, while Mrs. Grantham took over some nights and weekends. After a time Mrs. Snyder began another stage of Alzheimer's, becoming combative, frustrated and angry. "At a certain point my sister said, 'I can't raise my kids and my mother, too,'" Mrs. Grantham said. For a year and a half, Mrs. Grantham took over their mother's care, having a person watch her mother during the day and handling the rest of the time herself.

A Difficult Decision

Those were difficult, tiring years for both sisters and their families. "For women in the sandwich generation things get tough," she said. "You want to be there in all directions. Eventually, I took a long hard look at my life and considered quitting my job and becoming her full-time caregiver. But I thought about my mother and I knew she wouldn't want me to do that. She would want me to live my own life."

Mrs. Snyder has lived on the Alzheimer's ward at Arden House for six years and Mrs. Grantham is a constant presence. She has hung many family portraits on the walls around her mother's bed: pictures of herself and her sister when they were babies, a wedding portrait of their mother's mother. "People with Alzheimer's often go back to their childhood and I wanted pictures up that might help her make a connection to her own mother," Mrs. Grantham said. "I wanted this to feel like home."

"She'd been so vital all her life," Mrs. Grantham said. "She played bridge and she had so many friends. After she retired, before my Dad died, they traveled all over. They really lived their lives. If the disease has taught me one thing it's how important it is to live your life."

Mrs. Grantham said she rarely got weary; in fact, she said she considered herself lucky to still have her mother, even a mother very different from the one she grew up with.

Mrs. Grantham will spend today at Arden House with her mother and will continue to be by her mother's side whenever she can. "My mother gave her life to me and I want to be there for her," Mrs. Grantham said, as she smoothed her mother's hair. "This is what life is about."

A Teen-Age Mom

Dreams Delayed But Not Lost

When Lisa Paterson was 14 she fell in with an older crowd. One fellow she really liked was 21 and handsome. "I was always a little ahead of myself," she said. "My mother was a teenager when she had me and she always had to work all the time, so I grew up pretty fast."

A family photograph of Lisa Paterson and her son, Jaquell Jackson.

She was still only 14 when she found out she was pregnant and faced what seemed like a mountain of decisions. "I had to figure out my whole life within a few weeks and make a decision that would affect my whole life," she said. "I decided to have the baby but even still I'd be crying half the time everyday, worrying."

Rather than hanging at the mall with her friends or finishing her freshman year in high school, Ms. Paterson spent the last three months of her pregnancy uncomfortable and bewildered, bedridden with toxemia. She was 15 when she went through 14 hours of labor and had her son, Jaquell Jackson. "It was hard in the hospital because the nurses didn't even address me, didn't even want to hear what I had to say," she said. "They don't respect you when you're a teen-age mother."

She and her mother were not getting along so she moved in with the baby's father for a short time, dealing with a crying infant, all the demands of motherhood and daily life. "I only knew how to cook frozen dinners; that's all we ate," she said. "I love my son. There's nothing in the world I wouldn't do for him, but girls who are 14, 13 or 12 should know what a 24-hour responsibility it is and for the rest of your life, too."

Eventually the relationship between Ms. Paterson and the baby's father foundered and he went off to join the service. She moved back in with her mother, stepfather and grandmother, who live in a small house in West Haven. She shares a bedroom with her son and does all her own cooking and cleaning. "Everybody here works and I have to pull my weight, it's only fair," she said. "I'm lucky to have a place to live. It's crowded here but my mother and grandmother spoil Jaquell like crazy and he loves them."

Ms. Paterson, who is now 17, spends most of her days driving toy cars into the dirt in the backyard with her son, chasing him around and wearing him out by about 9 or 10 P.M., when he finally settles into sleep. Then she has an hour or two to call her own. "I love those hours at the tail end of the night," she said. "Those are mine. I write some poetry. I relax."

Recently, for the first time since she became a mother, she has had more than an hour to herself; she has had several days. The baby's father, who returned from basic training, asked to spend a few days with his son in New York.

"I really miss my son; it's funny without him," she said. "But I've been spending all my time trying to find a job. And I want him to have a relationship with his father. I'm going to encourage that because I think it's important for him to have us both."

Working Toward Her G.E.D.

She dropped out of high school a year after having her son but is working toward her general equivalency diploma and has taken a course to become a nurse's aide. The boy's father pays some support but it is not enough to get by. "I want to find work but day care costs so much and I'm trying to find a way to do it," she said. "I don't think teen pregnancy has to be such a tragedy, that you're doomed to a life of welfare. I think you can take control of your life and make a way for yourself and your child but it's not easy and I'm not your typical teen parent."

Ms. Paterson said many of her friends from West Haven High School had become pregnant and had children. Many have lost their motivation and dreams, she said, but she refuses to. Eventually, she would like to go back to school at night and become a nurse or a writer.

She said she received much help from Parenteen, a support program for teen-age parents that is part of the West Haven Community House. The program, which is run by a social worker, Joy Rice, offers counseling and links teen-age mothers to social service programs.

"There are things you just can't talk about with your parents, problems that you can bring to Joy that you can't bring to them," she said.

"Sometimes I know my son will be lucky because I'll be growing up with him and maybe I'll be able to relate to things better with him. But other times I think he misses out because I don't have as much to offer to him, being so young."

More Children Must Wait

Ms. Paterson offers a visitor a snapshot of her son and she points out how they are dressed in the same bright blue. "He's such a charmer," she said. "Everywhere I go with him people just fall in love with him. He's so energetic and full of life. You just have to love him."

Ms. Paterson said she had a new steady boyfriend, but more children don't figure in the picture at the moment. "I want to get married someday and have more children," she said. "But I want to be able to offer them a stable life. I have to be settled first."

er. A tower resembling a lighthouse rises between the wings; a weather station will be built in the tower.

From the top of the tower is a panoramic view of Black Rock Harbor in Bridgeport, a bustling estuary full of pleasure boats as well as barge traffic carrying petroleum products and road construction materials. The back of the school abuts the boatyard of Captains Cove Marina. Mr. Visel said it was the perfect setting for a school devoted to maritime occupations.

Mr. Connelly said the idea for the school began in 1985 as an experimental program between Bridgeport and Monroe, financed by a state grant, called "Mountain to the Sea." Students from the two communities traveled on Saturday mornings to the hills of Monroe or the Bridgeport shore for environmental studies.

A school with a view, devoted to maritime occupations.

But the grant application also stressed the integration aspects of the program, bringing together students of different racial and economic backgrounds from a big city and a suburban town. At that time, "there was absolutely nothing going on between the city and the suburbs," Mr. Connelly said.

Promoting Racial Integration

The integration argument helped bridge the divisions between Bridgeport and the suburbs again in 1987 when General Assembly delegations from Bridgeport, Fairfield, Monroe, Trumbull, Stratford, Milford and Shelton supported the creation of the regional aquaculture school. "It was clearly everyone's intent that here is a vehicle for racial integration," Mr. Connelly said.

$2,100 Annual Tuition

But the unity of the legislators was not initially duplicated by all seven communities. Faced with rising pressure from taxpayers to hold down budgets, officials in some school districts resisted paying the $2,100 annual tuition and providing transportation for their students to attend the aquaculture school, as mandated by state law.

"Initially, we had some problems recruiting kids in Milford," Mr. Connelly said. He said Milford recently appointed a new superintendent and access for recruiters has improved, although with only three students attending, Milford has the second lowest enrollment at the school.

Lowest is Shelton, which sends two brothers but does not pay their travel expenses. "The law is clear that if a youngster is accepted by the regional aquaculture or agriculture vocational school, the district that youngster comes from must provide transportation," Mr. Connelly said. Next fall when the school is fully in operation, he said he wanted to make sure it had full enrollment and would insist that every student was provided transportation in accordance with the law.

Students Vie for Openings

Anthony Savignano, director of operations for the Shelton public schools, said he was not opposed to paying for tuition or transportation for Shelton students to attend the aquaculture school. But he acknowledged that Shelton officials were initially reluctant to do so. "Every education dollar is so hard fought," he said.

In Stratford, on the other hand, the aquaculture school is so popular that more students apply than can be accepted. The town's two high schools have 26 students in the program, second only to Bridgeport, which has 38.

A Stratford High School guidance counselor, Albert Chapar, said the school had a dozen students vying for four openings, and wanted slots from the town's other high school, Bunnell.

"The students feel it's an excellent balance to their academic subjects," Mr. Chapar said. "They get to go out on the boat and build their lobster traps. They like the hands-on stuff." ■

Crisis Care Comes Home to Bridgeport

Carl David LaBianca for The New York Times

Dr. David Manning Reed performs minor surgery in his Stamford office.

By VALERIE CRUICE

DAVID MANNING REED is a doctor to Russians, Kurds, Iraqis, Peruvians, Somalis, Armenians and Americans regardless of politics. And later this spring, the 42-year-old surgeon from Stamford, who has worked for the disaster and emergency relief program Americares, will address the need for similar aid in Connecticut when he heads an all-volunteer, public clinic in an Americares program called Doctors to All Peoples.

The program, the Bridgeport Free Medical Clinic, will be in the former Ralpholo Taylor Community Center in East Bridgeport. "It is intended as a model to be used with our affiliate centers," Dr. Reed said. "For example, Yale School of Medicine has expressed interest in a similar project."

Dr. Reed, who is an attending surgeon at Stamford Hospital and St. Joseph's Medical Center in Stamford, said he was one of many American medical professionals in the Doctors to All Peoples program who volunteer to treat patients and train other doctors in new medical techniques.

"I've never had trouble getting doctors," he said. "The goal I have is to build our program into a large vehicle for doctors and nurses to volunteer their time. Everywhere I go the interest is tremendous. Many are doing this on their own anyway. We all take care of people for nothing. I've never seen a patient turned away from a hospital."

Disasters Around the World

Dr. Reed, an assistant professor of surgery at New York Medical College in Valhalla, N.Y., has participated in nine Americares airlifts since 1986, being among the first civilians on disaster scenes around the world.

Americares, a nonprofit relief organization that responds to emergencies worldwide, solicits donations of food, pharmaceutical items and medical supplies from American companies, and then delivers the supplies.

The Doctors to All Peoples program, which has been evolving since Americares was founded in 1982, grew out of the organization's response to the earthquake in Armenia in 1988.

Blankets and Medicine

Dr. Reed was one of the medical people who went to Armenia. "When you have earthquakes, you have crush victims, and amputations," he said. "We first went in with supplies — blankets, medicine. Then we set up our first field operation, and sent a team where we performed orthopedic surgery. We also opened a prosthetic clinic because there was tremendous limb loss.

Several patients were brought to the United States and treated at

Stamford Hospital, St. Joseph's Hospital in Stamford and Norwalk Hospital.

Many of the events to which the relief organization responds have not been natural disasters but rather situations in which civilians have been caught between political or military adversaries.

"Iran was a wild place," Dr. Reed recalled. "After the Gulf war there there was a tremendous problem with the Kurds; 1.2 million went to Iran. We were the first Westerners in 12 years to work in Iran. It was a very schizophrenic situation. The government in Teheran welcomed us," he said, "but there was this shadow government called the Revolutionary Guard, who reported to the Mullahs." Members of the guard harassed and finally ejected the medical teams, ripping out intravenous needles and causing babies to die, according to Dr. Reed.

Children and Cluster Bombs

Dr. Reed also discussed details of other trips. In Ethiopia two years ago, he said, "little kids would pick up Russian cluster bombs — little unexploded bombs — and blow their hands off." In Kuwait he performed surgery on a 9-year-old boy who had stepped on an Iraqi mine and had shrapnel wounds. There was no food, no water, no telephone or electricity.

Currently, former Yugoslavia, Somalia and Russia are commanding the attention of Americares. "In Yugoslavia we have lot of doctors and nurses but they need supplies," he said. "Our efforts have been directed toward that." Somalis are getting the help they need in a clinic in Mandeara, Kenya, just over the border, and staffed by a team from Doctors to All Peoples, he added.

"One of the most interesting places to be right now is Russia," he said. "It's the most dramatic, revolutionary event in my lifetime. It's utterly chaotic. They don't know how to be free."

Awareness of Privileged Life

Dr. Reed said he could not do what he does without the support of his family, his medical partner and his patients. "You go on these things, and you're never the same," he said. "It renews your sense of awareness of the privileged life you have."

Dr. Reed, who was born and raised in Southport, said he became interested in medicine when he spent a couple of high school summers in Honduras with a group called Amigos de las Americas. "We gave immunizations, taught people about cooking food, latrines, garbage; these things limit deaths and disabilities," he explained.

Before going to medical school, Dr. Reed earned a master's degree in public health. While studying medicine, he organized a group of 25 medical students who went to China under the sponsorship of the International Federation of Medical Students Association.

Dr. Reed completed a one-year term as medical director of the Doctors to All Peoples program last week. "I'm looking forward to getting out from behind the telephone and the desk, and concentrating on my practice and occasional field work," he said. ■

Exploring Essentials Of Life And Death

By ALVIN KLEIN

Michael Rush

A scene from "Foirades/Fizzles," a joint venture by Samuel Beckett and Jasper Johns.

MICHAEL RUSH did not mean "Foirades/Fizzles" to be a response to "Angels in America," but chance governs all, so why not.

The statement Mr. Rush does mean to make by staging the 1976 limited-edition volume that combined Samuel Beckett's words with Jasper Johns's etchings is: "Too many too young are dying." And it's made in less than one hour.

"Angels in America," Tony Kushner's three-and-a-half-hour Pulitzer Prize-winner, part one of a seven-hour epic that deals with AIDS, graphically as well as symbolically, had its eagerly anticipated Broadway opening last Tuesday. Mr. Rush's theater piece is to be performed at the Mattatuck Museum Performing Arts Center in Waterbury on Saturday and repeated at the Atelier in Branford on May 22. Such a confluence of events prompted Mr. Rush to muse upon connections and, in general, confluence among artists.

"AIDS exists metaphorically in this piece; there is no mention of it," said Mr. Rush, who is described as an experimental theater artist. "And I get people off the hook in under an hour," Mr. Rush noted.

Beckett, who was born in 1906 and died in 1989, revolutionized modern tragedy and comedy by creating a new theater art of minimalism. Characters, plots, props — all were pared down to essentials. Indeed, the Beckettian theme had to do with the discovery of the essence of existence. His theater works — "Waiting for Godot" is the seminal play — bear such revelatory titles as "Endgame," "That Time," "Catastrophe" and "Not I." One, "Breath," lasts 30 seconds, exactly, and has no actors. And consider his prose titles: "The Unnameable," "Worstward Ho," "Stories and Texts for Nothing," and "Stirrings Still," his last work published in his lifetime.

For the Beckett-Johns volume, Beckett provided five of the eight short texts about living and dying, longing and resignation, that he had written in French between 1960 and 1975. The word foirades means casual jottings in French; fizzles, a fading away, is the English word intended more as a consequence than a counterpart to the French work. Mr. Rush's stage piece had its premiere at the Little Theater in New Haven in September.

Jasper Johns, who is 62 years old and lives in New York, has been termed "the venerated father of the Pop Art movement of the 60's." The Beckett-Johns works were more a joint venture than a real collaboration, "since each artist contributed pre-existing materials," wrote Richard S. Field, the curator of prints, drawings and photographs of Yale University's Art Gallery in the catalogue edition of "Foirades/Fizzles."

The Johns art consisted of 33 etchings of buttocks, knees, torso and other body parts taken from a large 1972 painting, "Untitled." The themes of the visual art include death and the body. The limited edition was released in the summer of 1976 (Number 250; price: $6,000).

When Mr. Rush, founder of the New Haven Artists Theater, came upon the catalogue at the Yale University Art Gallery in 1988, he said he knew that he would dramatize it some day. He was then involved in the making of the first part of a theater piece based on Proust's "Remembrance of Things Past," a projected cycle still in progress.

"Similar themes are attended by great artists, who are preoccupied and experimenting with the essentials, the matter, the stuff of their art forms in remarkably similar ways," Mr. Rush said. "Seeing this volume further enhanced my belief that Beckett was the leading dramatic experimentalist, with form and time leaps, of this century. His influence is so pervasive that, as I remember a French critic once said, 'There can be no original work in the theater until we get Beckett out of our minds.' "

In tribute to a dying friend, Mr. Rush acted upon the idea of having young people voice the words in contrast to traditional old Beckett characters in tattered clothes. Mr. Rush divided Beckett's words, unaltered, among three nameless characters, played by Juanita Walsh, Peter Soares and Mr. Rush himself.

"This is not only an homage to Beckett, but an acknowledgment of how he grappled with the subject of death, and that as an artist, I could be touched by that as a way of dealing with the plague," Mr. Rush said. "For Beckett, in finality, there was hope; in the weakest, there was a meaning to be found; to simply go on is profoundly meaningful to me. And with the deterioration, the fragmentation of young bodies in Johns — well, this work was prescient."

In a multimedia production, projections of Johns's sketches and other photographs, music and sound design — the composer is David Lawson — there is yet another collaboration between Mr. Rush and Joy Wulke, a visual artist who lives in Stony Creek. Ms. Wulke designed a setting of light and glass and silk fabric that begins with an exhibition entitled "Ambience of Entrance" in the foyer of the museum. "It sets the mood for the performance," explained Ms. Wulke, whose pieces consist of life casts of hands and arms in gestural positions, or holding illuminated objects and feet that appear to be floating in space or walking on frozen glass shards.

"The effect is disjointed," Ms. Wulke continued. "The separation of body parts and the coming together again ethereally, so that the scary side of incompleteness is transcended to make a connection that's even more meaningful."

For openers, the performance will consist of "Nacht und Träume," an eight-minute silent piece by Beckett, save for the singing of a Schubert lied. This was Beckett's intention to enact a dream involving two characters, with the play's action consisting of a comforting hand, a cup and a cloth.

"The stage directions are precise; there is no dialogue," Mr. Rush said. "I am enamored of brevity. And audiences bring their own associations freely; that's the appeal of abstraction. AIDS was my impetus, but it doesn't have to be AIDS; it could be children dying in drug wars or being murdered. The power and timelessness is there for everyone."

FOOD

By MOIRA HODGSON

HAMBURGERS and hot dogs were — and still are — the most popular items for the outdoor grill. But the old-style barbecue has undergone many changes since the fashion for it first swept the nation in the 1940's. The current status symbols are gas grills that cost half as much as a car, flavored wood chips, exotic marinades and fancy salsas. And as Americans look for food that is low in fat and calories, without preservatives, sugar or rich creamy sauces, so the search for new flavors and ingredients continues.

As noted last week, Oriental seasonings — soy sauce, sesame oil, fresh coriander — do a great job of enhancing the taste of grilled foods, especially seafood. I like to buy shrimp in Chinatown, where they are sold with their heads on, and soak them for a couple of hours in heavily salted ice water, which leaches out impurities. They are then patted dry and tossed in a mixture of peanut oil and black and red peppers with garlic. Cooking them in their shells concentrates their flavor — and the shells can also be eaten, if you like.

Whole red snapper (cleaned and scaled but with the head on) is good scored and marinated in a mixture of minced Oriental black beans, scallions, ginger and garlic before being grilled.

And tuna, which is at its best rare, is very good cut thick, grilled so that it has a crust but is still raw in the middle, and served with traditional Japanese garnishes. To make this dish, buy only the best and freshest tuna from a reputable fish store. The version below came about after I brought home some tuna from Citarella, on Broadway at 75th Street in Manhattan, that was so fresh I started to nibble at it raw. So instead of grilling it the usual way, I decided to make an Oriental-style dish, a "seared sushi."

When cooking the following dishes on an outdoor grill, have plenty of coals and light them about 35 to 40 minutes in advance. They should be red hot so that the fish cooks quickly. Rice and steamed or grilled vegetables go well with them.

Seared Tuna 'Sushi'

Total time: 45 minutes

2 tuna steaks, about 2 inches thick and 12 ounces each
3 tablespoons cracked black pepper
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons five-spice powder
Soy sauce
4 tablespoons thinly sliced ginger
4 tablespoons wasabi paste mixed with 4 tablespoons water.

1. Wipe steaks dry with paper towels. Mix pepper, salt and five- spice powder together and coat outside of tuna. Leave for about 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Sear the tuna over very hot coals for about two minutes on the top and on the bottom. Pass the sides over the coals for a minute. Cool the tuna and serve, passing the soy sauce, ginger and wasabi paste separately.

Yield: 4 servings.

Note: Wasabi paste is a Japanese green horseradish available in Asian food markets.

Grilled Red Snapper With Black Beans

Total time: 45 minutes

1 whole red snapper (about 2 pounds) cleaned, scaled, with head on
2 tablespoons minced Oriental black beans
1 clove garlic, minced
2 scallions, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, finely chopped
2 tablespoons peanut oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespcons chopped coriander leaves
1 lemon, cut into quarters.

1. Score the fish twice on each side vertically. Combine the Oriental black beans, garlic, scallions, ginger, peanut oil, salt and pepper. Spread the mixture over the fish and inside the cavity. Let the fish marinate for at least 30 minutes.

2. Preheat grill or broiler. Broil the fish for six to seven minutes on each side, or until done. To serve, sprinkle with coriander and garnish with lemon.

Yield: 2 to 3 servings.

Grilled Sesame Shrimp

Total time: 45 minutes

2 pounds large shrimp, shells on (heads, too, if possible)
2 tablespoons coarse salt
2 tablespoons freshly ground pepper 2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon ginger, minced
1 teaspoon red pepper flakes
2 tablespoons sesame oil.

1. Rinse the shrimp, pat them dry (leaving the shells on) and toss them in a mixture of salt, pepper, peanut oil, garlic, ginger and red pepper. Preheat grill or broiler.

2. Place the shrimp on an oiled rack and grill for two to three minutes on each side. Be careful not to overcook them. Remove them from the grill, place them in a bowl and toss them with sesame oil. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings. ■

CONNECTICUT GUIDE

PRESERVATION PLANNING

Scenic roads to outdoor sculpture and town greens to Main Streets will be discussed in Wethersfield on Thursday from 9 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. when the Connecticut Trust for Historic Preservation will hold a statewide caucus titled Preservation Connecticut, at the Keeney Memorial Center, 200 Main Street.

Nellie L. Longsworth, president of Preservation Action in Washington, D.C., will be the keynote speaker at 9:30, followed by John W. Shannahan, director of the Connecticut Historical Commission.

Architects, historians, officers of local preservation trusts, grants officials and members of state and local agencies will conduct half-hour workshops, and a video by the National Trust for Historic Preservation Northeast Region will provide guidelines for preservation planning in small communities.

A fee of $10 includes lunch. Call 562-6312 for reservations or more information.

TOUR DE FAIRFIELD

The 16th annual Bloomin' Metric Bike Tour takes off from 7 to 9:30 A.M. next Sunday at Jennings State Park in Fairfield. Since the ride is not a race, starting times and routes are discretionary. "The idea is to enjoy the dogwoods and azaleas and the beauty of the coastline and the inland hills," said Cristene Gonzalez, an organizer.

The course of the traditional metric's is 62 miles, or 100 kilometers, but some bikers may choose a 25-mile or 46-mile route. Ten-speed bikes will help on the hills and helmets must be worn. All riders will be issued free water bottles.

Entry fees are $15 on the day or $12 in advance, for the benefit of Cancer Care Inc. of Connecticut. Route leaders, signs and painted directions on the pavement will help guide cyclists, and there will be food and rest stops along the way.

For more information or to register call 254-8787.

'YALE COLLECTS YALE'

The work of 76 artists who graduated from the Yale School of Fine Art or studied there have been lent to the university's art gallery for an exhibition that will remain on view through July 31. The 130 paintings, sculptures and works on paper are owned by Yale alumni, and they are dated from 1950 to 1989.

Students from the 50's include Richard Anuszkiewicz, Ivan Chermayeff, Eva Hesse and Neil Welliver. Enrolled through the early 60's were Jennifer Bartlett, Robert Berlind, Chuck Close, Rackstraw Downes, Nancy Graves, Robert Mangold, Sylvia Plimack Mangold, Robert Reed and Richard Serra.

A list of later students continues to read like a Who's Who in art with such names as Jonathan Borofsky, Steven Currie, Judy Pfaff, and the youngest artist in the show, Matthew Barney, who graduated in 1989.

Janet Saleh Dickson, the gallery's curator of education, will give free gallery talks on Tuesday at 2 P.M. and Thursday at 1 P.M. The show is called "Yale Collects Yale"; the gallery is at Chapel and York Streets in New Haven. It is open free of charge Tuesday through Saturday from 10 to 5, Sunday from 2 to 5. Call 432-0600 for more information.

HOME SHOW

Innovations in materials and techniques for home building, remodeling and decorating will be available at the Northwest Connecticut Spring Home and Garden Show.

Sponsored by the Home Builders Association of Northwest Connecticut, the event will be held at the Goshen Fair Grounds off Route 63, Saturday from 10 A.M. to 8 P.M. and Sunday from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. More than 100 exhibits, products and services will be featured, including security systems, mortgages, vacations and landscaping. Admission is $2. For more information call 561-3250 or 231-8870.

CANADIAN CULT CLOWNS

Mump and Smoot, performers on the flip side of conventional theater, will bring their show to the Yale Repertory Theater on Friday at 8 P.M. Based in Toronto and known as the Clowns of Horror, Michael Kennard (Mump) and John Turner (Smoot), arrayed in frightening clown costumes, rarely visit the United States, content with playing to sellout audiences in Canada.

They speak a non-language that sounds vaguely familiar, and in their onstage journey, titled "Mump and Smoot in 'Ferno," they swing widely from humor to horror as they survive

Relax... It's a Wagner.

Our automated systems make pool maintenance easy.

Recreation. Fitness. Elegance.
A Wagner means so much. And unlike ordinary pools, it won't soak up your spare time with pool maintenance chores. Because only Wagner offers these innovative features.

Pebble Tec™ interior surface.
Line your pool with the natural beauty of water worn pebbles set in a concrete matrix. Stronger, more durable and easier to clean than traditional surfaces, Pebble Tec resists staining, etching and blistering. The gentle, non-slip surface also absorbs the sun's heat, keeping your pool warmer. Pebble Tec is the only interior finish with a five year warranty.

Aquatech® ozone water purification system.
Ozone, the safest, most effective water purifier available, lets you reduce harsh chlorine and chemical use up to 50%. Ozone is simply a form of oxygen that makes water crystal clear without harming your pool and equipment or irritating swimmers' eyes and skin. And it creates no harmful byproducts.

Aquatech® in-floor cleaning system.
Cut pool maintenance to a fraction of the time required with conventional cleaning systems. This in-floor cleaning system automatically cleans dirt, sand, soot — even leaves — from your pool. Extraordinary water circulation distributes heat evenly throughout the pool — no cold spots!

Even Glo™ fiber optic lighting system.
Here at last is a "no voltage" fiber optics lighting system that will give a warm, even, elegant light. Since there are no electrical connections in the pool, the lighting system is totally safe.

DX™ computer-operated pool system with PoolTalk.

Now you can operate your pool from inside your home. Just tell the In-home Terminal how you want to use your pool and the DX POOL System properly sets your equipment, testing water and adding chemicals as needed. Your filter is backwashed automatically.
And for the ultimate in carefree maintenance — at an affordable price — get DX PoolTalk. An optional telephone modem lets your pool's computer call Wagner with a daily detailed update of your pool's operations, as well as any unusual conditions. DX PoolTalk lets Wagner continuously monitor and maintain your pool for you — even when you're away.

Call Wagner for a beautiful pool — and more time to enjoy it.

Maybe it's time to see for yourself why they write love songs about apple blossoms.

Right now, we've got almost three-hundred-and-fifty acres of apple blossoms in bloom.
And, we've been in the apple business, right here on this land, for over two hundred and fifty years and we still go a little goo-goo eyed.
Even the geese and the ducks are looking at each other a little differently these days.
If we were you, we'd come out and look at the blossoms.
Do a little shopping for fruits and vegetables.
Maybe buy some plants and flowers at our Farmers Market.
Best prices around.
Buy some of the best beef you ever bought in our Butcher Shop.
Even play a round on our Robert Trent Jones 18-hole Championship Course.
We know people who have shown up with their significant other who never realized how significant their other was before.
Like we say around here this time of year, what's good for the goose might just be worth a gander.

As Belts Tighten, Lunch Clubs Lose Allure

By FRANCES J. BENDER

IN the main dining room of the Algonquin Club, a private business luncheon club in downtown Bridgeport, waiters stand ready to serve patrons. But at 1:30 P.M. on a recent weekday, just six customers remained. The rest of the club, with ornate furnishings and expansive views of Long Island Sound and Bridgeport's business district, stood empty.

The Grille Room, an adjacent dining area considered part of the Algonquin Club, is open to the public and brings in a steady lunchtime business. Until last year, it was reserved for Algonquin Club members only.

The Algonquin is one of several Connecticut clubs facing steep declines in membership and income. In a state hit severely by the recession, business lunch clubs continue to lose members to corporate layoffs, job relocations and cautious spending.

"You only have to walk around downtown Bridgeport to see it's been hit very hard," said John Fallon, a Fairfield lawyer and Algonquin Club president.

'An Institutional Upheaval'

Mr. Fallon said his 100-year-old club might face extinction if it did not show a rapid turnaround. Membership, once 600, has reached a low of 250 this year. For close to 20 months now, the club has been operating in debt, Mr. Fallon said.

"I can remember going up there as a young man, and seeing tables filled with people from banks and corporations," Mr. Fallon, 43 years old, said. "But since then we've had an institutional upheaval in Bridgeport."

Eleven people from the Marriott Corporation were hired two years ago to manage the club's food and beverage service. Of those, only three remain.

Mr. Fallon and Robert Scinto of Shelton, the building's landlord, met with restaurant owners several times during the winter to discuss subleasing a part of the club, which is on the top floor of the Wright Investors Building.

But those talks have ended, and Mr. Fallon instead hired a new club manager, James Fitzpatrick, on April 4. Mr. Fitzpatrick said he planned to solicit lunch and catering business very aggressively.

"We have a new club manager and hopefully that will be our solution for the long term," Mr. Fallon said.

"We have to make imminent adjustments," he said. "We've been struggling in this economy and we're reaching a point where we won't be able to do that for much longer."

Photographs by Janet Durrans for The New York Times

Taxes Are a Factor

Jane Haddad is general manager of the Waterbury Club, a private lunch club that has a reciprocal membership agreement with the Algonquin. She said her club in downtown Waterbury had lost 102 members since 1989, down from an already low 402.

She attributes the drop not only to an exodus of manufacturing and industry from downtown Waterbury but also to cutbacks by corporations concerned that club membership dues and restaurant bills will soon cease to be tax deductible.

Club memberships, once a common perk, are being eliminated by many corporations, Ms. Haddad said. "New tax proposals have a lot of people scared," she said.

Some club members, and the management teams they have hired, are creating new, more aggressive marketing strategies as a way to revitalize sluggish memberships. For starters, Ms. Haddad said the Waterbury Club now has a new chef and a revamped lunch menu.

"Even if food is not the problem, it helps to spur excitement," she said.

The Graduate Club in downtown New Haven, also a reciprocal membership club, occupies a Colonial-style house on the campus of Yale University. The club was begun a century ago by a group of Yale graduates seeking a private spot away from students, said Sandra Gervais, the club's general manager.

Male Bastions Fall

Since that time it has remained open only to college graduates, and until 1972, no women were allowed.

"Just about every club was all male 20 to 30 years ago," Ms. Gervais said. "Women just weren't in business."

Now, even with a strong female showing of about 20 percent, the Graduate Club's membership, 720 in 1987, has dropped to 530. Ms. Gervais said her club, too, had begun more aggressive marketing.

"That's something we never had to do before," she said. "Eight or nine years ago, people just came in the door. There were perks and free memberships. Free money was everywhere. Now, even small businessmen who used it for networking can't afford it anymore."

People sitting on the Graduate Club's two-year-old membership committee are asked now to "look to their friends" as potential members, Ms. Gervais said.

They have also begun marketing to a younger family membership — trying to offer an alternative to "three-martini lunches and stodgy corporate dealings" once associated with downtown business clubs, she said.

Even that marketing strategy poses its own difficulties, however, when many younger families are struggling to meet mortgages and are worrying about job security.

Membership dues are on a multi-tier scale between $350 and $800.

The Landmark Club in Stamford, one of the larger business lunch clubs in the state, had 1,600 members in the mid-1980's, but now has only 1,184, said the club manager, Tom Mielo. More breakfast and lunch buffets are offered now, a break from once popular corporate cocktail parties and dinners.

"The club's severe downturn was in the first quarter of 1992," Mr. Mielo said.

At the Algonquin Club, Mr. Fallon cautioned that more than jobs or membership dues stood to be lost if it finally closed its doors. A tradition will also be gone, he said.

"It's not the kind of news the city needs right now, as it's struggling," he said. "It's important from the city's perspective to try to keep our club downtown. There's a 100-year tradition that we're trying to maintain there." ■

By JOHN WARDE

CHOOSING outdoor house paint has always been challenging, especially since air-pollution laws have become stricter. As a result, manufacturers are reformulating products, causing some, specifically oil- or alkyd-based varieties, to have different qualities.

Most paint today is latex based. The term refers to the chemicals in the binders, which make up the film that forms when the paint dries. The best latex-based paint contains 100 percent acrylic binders, which adhere more strongly than other types and also bond to a wider range of surfaces.

Next is paint with vinyl-acrylic binders, followed by paint with binders of vinyl terpolymer. In all latex paint, water is used as thinner to maintain the correct consistency for application. As the water evaporates, the paint dries.

Oil- and alkyd-based paints use as binders vegetable oil like linseed oil, or alkyd resins, which are synthetic. Because neither paint is dissolved by water, mineral spirits are used as thinner. For practical purposes, the terms "oil" and "alkyd" are interchangeable. Paint containing solely oil as a binder is virtually nonexistent. Most varieties contain just alkyds, or else a blend of the two.

Because of its water content and the composition of its binders, latex paint emits few of the hazardous fumes called volatile organic compounds that new pollution laws limit. As a result, most manufacturers have done little reformulating of latex paint.

High-quality latex paint continues to be a better choice than alkyd paint for painting house exteriors. Its assets include durability, ease of application and cleanup and faster drying time. Latex paint also resists bleaching and fading better, has less odor and has better resistance to mildew.

Latex and oil paints use similar pigments but have different binders and thinner.

Alkyd paint, on the other hand, contains chemicals that emit volatile compounds, heretofore in large amounts. Conventional alkyd paint has traditionally been admired for its hardness, sheen and smooth application on rough surfaces.

Newer varieties, reformulated to comply with new regulations, are softer and less shiny. But they also tend to fade and chalk more readily as they age, because they contain fewer solvents and more solids, and their thickness makes them less easy to apply.

The newer alkyds are generally a better choice than latex on heavily chalked surfaces that do not respond to cleaning, on surfaces to which three or more coats of alkyd paint already adhere and when temperatures are below 60 degrees or above 85, the optimum conditions for applying latex. Because of their flexibility, the newer alkyds are less brittle and therefore less prone to cracking and peeling than the older variety. Newer alkyd paint also has less odor and is less of a fire hazard.

To estimate how much paint is needed measure the rectangular areas to be painted by multiplying their widths by their heights and measure the triangular areas by multiplying their heights by half their widths. Add the figures together and show your answer in square feet.

Next, measure the areas of any features that will not be painted. Add them together and subtract that sum from the total. Divide the answer by the spread rate on the paint-can label, which is the approximate number of square feet a gallon will cover. The result is the estimated number of gallons needed to apply one coat of paint to the area calculated.

The best results with latex and alkyd paint depend on proper surface preparation, and that may require applying primer and sealer.

To estimate amount of paint needed for one coat, total the surface area and subtract areas not to be painted. Divide answer by spread rate printed on the can.

Primer promotes adhesion of new paint. Sealer keeps paint from being unevenly absorbed. Primer-sealers contain both ingredients.

Primer-sealer is usually not needed when repainting previously painted wood surfaces that are in good condition. But wash such surfaces free of dirt and chalked paint, preferably with a rented power washer, before repainting. Sand shiny areas lightly, so that the new paint will grip better.

Primer-sealer is required on painted wood surfaces in poor condition and to cover places where bare wood is exposed. It is also required on unpainted new wood. Latex or oil-based primer-sealer can be used under latex paint. Use oil-based primer-sealer beneath alkyd paint and for severely chalked surfaces that cannot be thoroughly cleaned. For wood that stains easily, notably cedar and redwood, use a water-based acrylic primer-sealer, regardless of the paint type. To cover individual stains like those from nails or knots use primer-sealer containing shellac.

Before repainting masonry, wash and scrub the surface thoroughly to remove loose particles. If that exposes masonry, apply masonry sealer or water-based acrylic primer-sealer. Otherwise, none is required. To prepare new masonry, apply either product.

Aluminum and vinyl siding can be painted with acrylic latex paint without using primer. Surfaces have to be thoroughly cleaned, and aluminum siding has to sanded. When selecting paint for aluminum siding, choose a flat variety, to avoid highlighting dents.

Never sand vinyl siding or scrub it with a wire brush, because that can damage the surface. Choose a color that is the same or lighter than the existing one. A darker color can allow siding to absorb too much heat, causing it to warp.

Galvanized metal like that of gutters and downspouts need not receive primer, either, unless rust is visible or extra protection from rusting is desired. In such cases, clean the metal by washing it and then wiping it with mineral spirits. Treat rust damage if there is any and apply two coats of a rust-inhibiting primer. ■

Animals That Ignore the 'Keep Out' Signs

By JOAN LEE FAUST

IT was Jim Henson's popular puppet, Kermit the Frog, who sang "It's Not Easy Being Green."

Well, it's not easy being a black squirrel either, especially when the rest of the squirrel family is gray. The squirrels in the neighborhood are the usual furry gray, except for one. And for want of a more dynamic name, the neighbors have dubbed him Blackie.

This squirrel lives where there are ample tall shade trees, green lawns and flowering trees and shrubs, but its life has proved to be rather lonely. The gray squirrels chase him away. It has no other playmates and always seems to be by itself, although squirrel watchers know that black coats are often the norm in the litters of the Eastern gray squirrels.

There does not seem to be much sympathy for squirrels of any color among gardeners. These ubiquitous animals have a bad reputation of brash behavior. Their penchant for digging gets them into serious trouble. They use their paws with rapid speed to dig up everything: the newly planted tubs that sport brightly colored spring pansies, the first signs of spinach seedlings in the vegetable patch, the flowers of hardy bulbs, especially crocus, and in the fall, the bulbs themselves.

Squirrels even knock off the tops of tulips. They nibble a petal or two and then leave carcasses of the flowers to wilt. The daffodils and hyacinths remain untouched, thankfully.

Squirrels also dig holes, big ones, in flower borders. Again, their busy little paws whip away at the soil in that ceaseless search for buried nuts or whatever. If only squirrels had files, or even computers, to help them keep track of where they put what.

Squirrels are also talkers. They will scold incessantly from their high tree perches as warnings to the rest of the family. Then they chase one another up and down the tree trunks or "fly" from branch to branch with their tails unfurled like sails. Even though Blackie may be singled out for his distinctness, he is not innocent and has picked up the same bad habits. The destruction goes on.

Although deer have top billing in this regard, squirrels must surely come in second. Many gardeners have given up on certain spring flowering bulbs, especially crocus and tulips, because they know that the squirrels always seem to get to them first.

Bulb merchants, and some gardeners, too, have been praising one particular crocus species as being squirrel proof, or at least squirrel resistant. These claims are for the species Crocus tommasinianus, a native plant of northern Bulgaria with soft purple flowers. This particular crocus species reseeds itself generously and is considered ideal for planting in places where many flowers are needed. For some reason, the squirrels do not find this particular crocus to their liking.

There is yet another troublemaker in the garden. This one has long ears, a short buttonlike tale and a twitchy nose and is know as the Eastern cottontail. As cute as these rabbits may seem to be, they are voracious nibblers.

It is no small wonder that those who enjoy salads often refer to themselves as rabbits. These cottontails find succulent leaves are just about the tastiest fare around. Overnight, they can ruin a thriving vegetable garden. And it is not just lettuce that is threatened. The rabbit palate is especially drawn to the tiny new leaves of all vegetable seedlings including spinach, beets and chard. Even the new growth of some of the perennials is not immune as long as the new leaves are succulent and tasty.

Of course, there are other animal nuisances. There are the mice and voles that feed on roots and chipmunks that nest in walls and feed on various tasty morsels. And skunks are noted for digging up lawns while they search for grubs.

The best solutions are those that discourage the populations in the first place. Live trapping to take the animals elsewhere is a kind answer, but it doesn't always work because some soon find their way back home.

Another solution is a large dog that takes on a barking guardianship of the property. But this can take on unwanted dimensions. The appearance of rabies in the Northeast has made caution a prime consideration.

Red pepper flakes and chili powder sprinkled on the ground where favorite flowers and plants are growing works for a time to ward off nibblers. So do the many commercial repellents that can be sprayed on plants and soil to create an unpleasant odor. But all too soon, the animals wise up. There are all kinds of solutions and usually the best foils are those that are worked out individually. You are on your own. ■

A Fusion Of Grieg And Ibsen

By ROBERT SHERMAN

A CASUALTY of last year's Hartford Symphony strike was the performance of a new edition of "Peer Gynt"; a second chance to hear the fusion of Ibsen's drama and Grieg's music, as conceived by Michael Lankester, music director of the Hartford Symphony, and the actor Christopher Plummer. The premiere will close out the Symphony's subscription season at the Bushnell, on Wednesday and Thursday at 8 P.M.

"Ibsen wrote 'Peer Gynt' as a dramatic poem," Mr. Lankester said, "a play to be read, not staged, and Grieg wrote music to make the audience understand the poet's intentions, to color, punctuate and heighten Ibsen's play." Mr. Plummer described most concert versions as unbalanced: "Grieg's score allowed a generous hearing," he said, "while the Ibsen text is sparsely and sketchily represented. So off we went, Michael and I, daring to attack the music of Grieg and the massive text of Ibsen, somewhat presumptuously cutting it down to a palatable length, but still keeping the key themes intact."

Mr. Plummer will be center stage as the narrator, with two vocal soloists, Jane Thorngren and Joyce Campana, and the Hartford Chorale. For reservations call the box office at 246-6807.

Another alliance of music and classic drama, not to mention another world premiere, is scheduled next weekend at the Stamford Palace, as Connecticut Ballet Theater introduces a new edition of Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream." The new work has been choreographed by the group's artistic director, Brett Raphael, who retells the tale "in glorious pas de deux and Renaissance dances, but with a twist." Performances for children are Friday at 10 A.M. and 12:30 P.M., Saturday at 8 P.M. and next Sunday at 12:30 P.M. For more details call 259-6153 or (800) 286-3100.

Christopher Plummer will read Ibsen's "Peer Gynt."

"The Eighth Day," a reworking of a medieval mystery play by Nancy Evans Bush and Toby Hall, was so well received at its premiere last spring that Asylum Hill Congregational Church in Hartford is staging it again, with 8 P.M. performances Friday, Saturday and next Sunday. Mr. Hall is directing the production once again, with Richard Einsel conducting (525-5696).

Younger audiences are well served by a number of concerts this week, starting this afternoon when the Soni Fidelis Wind Quintet takes youngsters to "Meet the Winds at the Zoo." Actually, the players will be convening at the Yale Center for British Art, but their free, back-to-back programs at 2 and 3:30 offer zoologically oriented pieces by Saint-Saëns, Stravinsky, Arnold, Holst and Milhaud (432-2850).

Tomorrow, Tuesday and Wednesday, the New Haven Symphony, under its assistant conductor, Peter Sacco, will be bringing "Joys of Sound" to youngsters in Ansonia, Hamden and Westbrook. Mother Goose (otherwise known as a costumed Bill Derry) is going to host Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" as well as Charles Ives's "Circus Band March" and other lively selections. For performance times and group seating information, call the Jewish Community Center of Greater New Haven at 387-2522.

The Hartford Symphony has also scheduled three student programs this week at the Bushnell. The first pairing, at 9:30 and 11 Wednesday morning, will be led by the Symphony's associate conductor Tibor Pusztai and narrated by Peter Harvey. It will present musical portraits of many lands by Bizet, Strauss, Copland and Tchaikovsky. Then Michael Lankester returns to the podium for an 11 A.M. Saturday salute to "Our Planet Earth," a family concert "with music inspired by rivers, mountains, volcanoes, rain forests and the New England countryside" (246-6807).

The children's trio of Sharon, Lois and Bram are bringing their "Great Big Tour" to the Palace in Stamford for 11 A.M. and 2 P.M. shows on Saturday. The trio's constant companion, Elephant, has promised to help in the dissemination of "all-time favorite songs for the whole family to sing, dance and clap along to" (358-2305).

Among the week's other attractions are three recitals this afternoon. The Guild Trio (of the violinist Janet Orenstein, the cellist Brooks Whitehouse and the pianist Patricia Tao) are playing Beethoven, Schubert and a new piece by Sheila Silver called "To the Spirit Unconquered" in a free 3 P.M. program at the Greenwich Library (637-3041). In First Church of Christ Congregational, in West Hartford at 3, a concert of French vocal music will be offered with the soprano Leslie Johnson and the tenor Christopher Clark accompanied at the piano by Toby Hall (723-2300).

At 4 P.M. a "Mother's Day Musicale" brings the mezzo Sandra Walker and the pianist Larry Allen to the Woodland Concert Series in Immanuel Congregational Church in Hartford. In addition to arias and spirituals, the former Metropolitan Opera star will perform several of Mendelssohn's Sacred Songs with the Immanuel Chancel Choir. Donations will be asked (527-8121). ■

GARDENER'S MARKET

More than 20 murseries in the New York, New Jersey and Connecticut area will be represented at the 32d annual May Gardeners Market in Greenwich on Saturday. It will be from 9:30 A.M. to 3:30 P.M. at the Montgomery Pinetum on Bible Street in Cos Cob.

Admission is free and there will be snacks and sandwiches available. To avoid parking problems, a free shuttle service will operate from the Community House on Bible Street. To reach the site take exit 5 off Interstate 95, turn left on the Post Road to the sixth traffic light; go right onto Orchard Street then take the third right onto Bible Street. For more information call 869-9242.

FANCY FEET

The Nutmeg Ballet in Torrington has scheduled two weeks of performances to be held at its studios at 21 Water Street. Student performers range from children to dancers about to enter professional companies elsewhere.

Two new ballets choreographed by Joan Kunsch and Scott Thyberg are called "My Last Duchess," based on Robert Browning's poem, and "Katabasis," from the Greek word for retreat. "Airs Above Ground," a new children's ballet by Susan Doucette, compares the discipline of ballet training to dressage for horses and riders. Each performance will include new works and repertory standards.

Performances will be Thursday through Saturday at 8 P.M., Sunday at 2 and 5 P.M., through May 23. Tickets are $15 and discounts are available. Call the box office for reservations and individual programs, 482-4413. ■

ART

The Good Life as Led a Century Ago

By VIVIEN RAYNOR

MANY collectors of art have started modestly with the tried and true — old prints, even postage stamps — then moved forward to the art of their own time. Richard Manoogian, however, reversed the procedure when, in the 1970's, he began with works by Jackson Pollock, Franz Kline, Frank Stella and their like. After that he turned his attention to the late 19th and early 20th centuries, acquiring works of artists from Martin Johnson Heade to William Merritt Chase, and from the trompe l'oeil specialists, John Peto and William Harnett, to the portraitist, John Singer Sargent, and assorted American Impressionists.

It is the kind of art making up the Yale University Art Gallery show, "A Private View: American Painting From the Manoogian Collection." Evidently the collector has sustained a change of heart as well as of taste, for the show is very much a celebration of the good life as it was led in the Victorian and Edwardian eras. Indeed he is quoted in the catalogue saying that "those from an ethnic background like myself often have a great appreciation for America" because of the opportunities it has created for their families.

For their part, the show's curators, Helen Moore, of Yale, and Nancy Rivard Shaw, who comes from the Detroit Institute of Fine Arts (of which Mr. Manoogian is a trustee), point out that the collector has aimed for and largely achieved comprehensiveness. Unfortunately, only visitors privy to the 1989 display of the collection that was organized by the Detroit Institute and the National Gallery are in a position to confirm this.

But there is no doubt that Yale has done well by this part of the collection, painting the gallery walls sage green and adding a polygon of partitions in the same color, together with potted palms. With the green an excellent foil for the canvases and for their substantial gold frames, the installation has plenty of Matisse's "luxe" and "calme" though little of his "volupté," unless a case can be made for the portraits by Chase and Sargent. The first is a velvety pastel of a blond woman in sooty black who sits in a chair draped with lime-green fabric, a pink cushion at her back. To paraphrase a comment by Robin Frank in her catalogue entry, this is a chaste image made subtly sensual by the pink of the cushion, which somehow hints at the flesh lurking underneath the black dress.

In the Sargent head of a young girl, the volupté is localized in the handling of the mouth, particularly in the lick of light running down the nose to the upper lip. Although his esthetic stock has risen in recent decades, Sargent is still too often dismissed as slick and shallow. Except for Chase (and he is a shade stiff) none of the figure painters in the display come close to him, especially not William Paxton, with his contrived composition titled "The Listener." In this, an Edwardian pinup figure in a white outfit trimmed with black fur pauses at the entrance to a room listening to another young woman playing a guitar. The figures, the furniture and the still life on the table look as if they had been taken from other paintings.

Though anecdotal art gets a better press in these revisionist days, it can still generate a shudder or two. An example is John George Brown's scene of three little girls hiding in a hollow oak. It doesn't help matters that Karl Willers suggests in his catalogue entry that the viewer can play the role of finder in a game of hide and seek and that he delves into the now hot issue of gender definitions. Then again Mr. Willers is not the only catalogue contributor to indulge in pseudo-educational writing. It remains only to say that Brown, one of several lesser knowns in the show, proves himself a competent painter in it and in his study of a young woman reclining on sand dunes.

The most ingratiating example of anecdotal art is Edward Lamson Henry's view of a Mr. and Mrs. John Bullard at home in their virtually all-red Brooklyn Heights parlor. They sit center stage under a chandelier of gas lamps, he reading the paper, she posed with her hand on an open book. A fire burns in the grate, notwithstanding the sunlight coming through the windows; pictures along with a huge mirror hang on the walls, and there are innumerable classical-style sculptures, including Harriet Hosmer's marble "Medusa," perched on a pillar. Visible outside are ships' masts, raising the possibility that Mr. Bullard was in some kind of maritime business. It is a comfy scene produced by Henry, who was a founder of the Cragsmoor Art Colony in upstate New York.

Other canvases in the same vein include the competent study of a woman in a sprigged muslin dress, who sits crocheting on a polished wood windowsill. It is the work of Francis Davis Millet, who spent time in England working also as a critic. Then there is Charles Sprague Pearce's scene of a pretty young woman lying with a parasol on the beach, dressed to the nines. Pearce, though an expatriate in France during the rise of Impressionism, seems to have resisted plein-air painting. In any event the incongruity between his figure, clearly produced in a studio, and the roughly painted beach littered with unconvincing white rocks is almost Surrealist. All the more welcome, therefore, is Maurice Prendergast's "Handkerchief Point," a lovely liquid watercolor of women with parasols and children swarming over rocks on the Massachusetts shore.

Among the trompe l'oeils is De Scott Evans's enigmatic picture of peanuts reposing under glass in a hole cut out of a plank. It seems to be a joke within the joke, for tucked under the glass is a card reading, "Free Sample Take One." That the glass is broken may indicate that somebody attempted to do just that. As for the master of trompe l'oeil, John Peto, his best works are still lifes that do not fool the eye. The best features two oranges partly wrapped in white paper with a segment of the fruit lying nearby.

Incidentally, the show is rich in apples: red apples on a table by Lemuel Wilmarth, red apples pouring out of a bag onto grass by Robert Spear Dunning, Levi Wells Prentice's landscape with a proscenium of red apples hanging from a branch, and, for a change of pace, yellow apples with bruises in Raphaelle Peale's "Fruit in a Silver Basket."

Childe Hassam, Theodore Robinson and Willard Metcalf are other noteworthy names, but the show's pièce de résistance comes from Heade. It is "Gems of Brazil": 16 small paintings of hummingbirds framed in groups but separated from one another by slender gold mullions. Now best known for his Luminist landscapes, Heade was by his own admission a hummingbird nut and his images, which were rediscovered in 1981, should make converts of their beholders. The subjects perch on branches against vague mountainous backgrounds under cloudy skies. Usually there is a nest, surprisingly large for so tiny a creature, that contains eggs or a couple of expectant beaks. Presumably, Heade, like other ornithological artists, painted his subjects dead — how else to capture in such exquisite detail something that lives in all but perpetual motion? Apropos, one of these pictures is devoted to a large blue butterfly, seemingly the kind that sacrificed its wings for glass paperweights and other Victorian bric-a-brac. No doubt, an example lurks somewhere in the Bullards' parlor. ■

"A Private View: American Painting From the Manoogian Collection" remains on view through July 31 at the Yale University Art Gallery.

Panel from "The Gems of Brazil," by Martin J. Heade.

Hey Ben. Go fly a kite!

Ben Franklin's kite, key, and thunderstorm experiment advanced the understanding of electricity which ultimately led to T.V. Unfortunately, not in his time, or his inventive nature would have had him craft a special cabinet to hold it.

Our expanded selection of Entertainment Centers offers a wonderfully inventive blend of 18th century grace and authenticity, and 20th century service. Come see for yourself.

DINING OUT

Germanic Fare With a Lighter Touch

By PATRICIA BROOKS

FRITZ'S in Woodbury is a rarity in Connecticut, one of a handful of restaurants specializing in German cuisine. In this cholesterol-conscious era of healthful dining, an interest in German food, with its emphasis on heavy meat-potato-and-dumpling dishes, has undergone a decline all over the United States.

Yet there's more to German cooking than an abundance of red meat. The Austrian chef and proprietor Gottfried Fritz Halbedl proves this, as the dishes on his German-Continental menu have a light touch and considerable sophistication. The restaurant itself, small as it is, has a similar light look and style. Pale peach walls of slatted wood, brass rails separating a small upper dining area from the lower one, subdued lighting and neatly napped tables with fresh tulips on each, all contribute to the upbeat, handsome décor.

A small menu of classics like onion soup gratinée, prosciutto and melon, steak au poivre and roast duckling in orange sauce, also includes two German entrees. Daily specials usually include an additional German dish or two.

In view of the chef's provenance, as well as the rarity of German dishes on most Connecticut menus, we decided to focus our attention on them. One first course was venison pâté, which unfortunately lacked seasoning and was dense, heavy and dry. We fared better with gravlax (premises-made and first-rate salmon) and lightly cooked asparagus. Both starters were served on dinner-size plates prettily adorned with carrot-raisin salad and Belgian endive. Another starter, baked brie served on a lingonberry mousse (light and whipped cream-rich), bore a well-browned crust and runny interior, just as desired. A superlative cream of cauliflower soup with sherry (well integrated and creamy) was a regal, subtly seasoned dish.

Between starter and main course came a crisp, mixed green salad with a choice of housemade dressings (balsamic vinaigrette and the potato-based house dressing were gusty and refreshing). An additional option was a cheese-endowed Caesar salad (made without egg, said our waitress, and, apparently, without anchovies as well).

The entree hit was rahmschnitzel, consisting of a tender veal escalope in a succulent mushroom cream sauce. Like all the entrees, its large plate was resplendent with potatoes, snow peas and summer squash. Calf's liver Tyrolean style was tender, cooked as ordered, in a red wine cream sauce that resonated of bacon, onions and mushrooms.

Zwiebelrostbraten, an Austrian specialty, was a large New York strip steak, chewy but with hearty flavor, though its fat should have been trimmed. What made it special was a dark, succulent red wine and onion sauce. Wienerschnitzel, a large, flat piece of tender veal, was expertly breaded, sautéed to a crisp and delivered with a lemon slice and capers circled by anchovies on top. While the veal was perfectly prepared (unlike the travesties that often pass for wienerschnitzel elsewhere), the dish lacked pizazz.

No matter what, save room for one of the desserts. As might be expected of an Austrian chef, desserts are triumphs. An order for a Grand Marnier or raspberry soufflé must be placed at the start of the meal. We can vouch for the raspberry — a cloud-soft interior and well-browned, puffy crust (punctured by the server with scoops of a sweet zabaglione). Equally lush and toothsome were the chocolate mousse (two scoops of silky, deep chocolate fluff) and chocolate torte (intense chocolate), both decorated with spoonfuls of zabaglione. Apple strudel was also winning: crispy pastry leaves and raisin-studded apple chunks), served warm à la mode.

Dinner for two cost $52.50 before tip, tax and beverages. Considering all the components — a generous salad, warm Italian bread and more-than-ample servings of every course — it represents very good value. In fact, two courses are more than sufficient for most people, but it would be a shame to miss dessert. A sizable wine list is also well-priced; especially so are the German wines, whose prices elsewhere have escalated in recent years.

Good, bordering on Very Good, Fritz's has the atmosphere, menu and competence to provide a congenial dining experience. ■

In Riverside, Specialties of North India

By PATRICIA BROOKS

An annex to a Howard Johnson's on U.S.1 in Riverside may seem an unlikely place to find an Indian restaurant, especially one with a Sikh in turban as a doorman. But guests enter Taj Mahal (past the uniformed Sikh) via a long canopy-covered walkway, bordered by flowers in full bloom. The spacious dining room is artfully separated into several areas, with generously spaced tables. One table 'n the rear is isolated under an appliquéd Gujerat canopy. White wicker settees and chairs, brass Indian sculptures, puppets, wall hangings and taped Indian music all create an atmospheric backdrop for delicious North Indian specialties.

We began with bhel poori, a cold appetizer rarely found on Indian menus in the area. It consisted of a mélange of rice, peas, onions, chopped tomatoes and generous bits of fresh coriander laced with a sweet-sour tamarind sauce that tickled the palate as a starter should. Almost as lively was dahi aloo poori, another salad-like cold dish of potato chunks and onions, with similar tamarind verve, in a tangy yogurt bath.

Sterling starters on other evenings were chicken chat (small pieces of white meat shredded, deeply marinated and cooked in a tangy mint sauce, ornamented with fresh coriander) and spinach pakoras (lumpy fritters of spinach and onions in a crunchy batter), served with a coconut-coriander chutney that added zest to the dish. Shrimp Malabar was less felicitous because the jumbo shrimp were tough and overcooked, though the creamy, well-seasoned sauce was a fine one.

A shared starter was the large platter of assorted nonvegetarian appetizers, with chicken tikka (moist, richly seasoned white meat), seekh kabab (minced lamb sausages) and reshmi kabab (broiled chicken with ginger and other spices). The same trio (plus well-spiced jumbo shrimp), in larger portion, forms an entree called tandoori mixed grill, baked in a clay tandoor oven. A relish tray of mint, tamarind and chili-onion chutneys provided added heat and a variety of flavors as needed.

Some of Taj Mahal's most memorable dishes were meatless. Chana masala, for instance, consisted of chick peas and potatoes cooked with garlic, ginger and other spices. Equally tasty was palek paneer — creamy spinach and mild Indian cheese chunks in a zesty, aromatic sauce. Mattar paneer combined fresh peas and the same cheese in a sauce redolent of ginger, garlic and hot pepper, and dal Punjabi was a winning combination of lentils, tomato, ginger and other spices.

The vegetarian thali is a good way to sample three vegetable dishes, along with basanati rice, raita (a cool, refreshing yogurt dish that provides a welcome oasis in an Indian meal) and a puffy papadum (a crisp lentil balloon). All this makes a complete meal (except for dessert) for $14.95 and comes in little dishes on a large platter (the thali).

Among the entrees, saag lamb was especially tasty, the lamb chunks and creamy spinach resonating with spices. Lamb vindaloo lived up to our expectations as the most incendiary dish on the menu. Chicken tikka masala (boneless pieces of intensely marinated white meat in a tangy chili-ginger-coriander-garlic sauce) and shrimp jalfrezie (also richly seasoned) were both devilishly appealing and fresh-tasting.

Raita is almost essential to an Indian meal and Taj Mahal offers three versions: with chopped fresh tomatoes, cucumbers or potatoes, all served with fresh mint. Other worthy accouterments included light, fluffy steamed basmatic rice, flavored with saffron, onions and tomatoes and topped with toasted almonds, and several tandoori-baked breads, especially the warm nan and onion kulcha (nan stuffed with chopped and seasoned onions).

Indian desserts are designed as refreshing finales to an inflammatory feast, though they rarely appeal to Western palates. But try the sweet-scented rice pudding (thinner than the Western version but richer in flavor) or rasmalai (cottage cheese balls in a creamy sauce, with a whisper of rose-water). A glass of mango lassi also makes a coolly satisfying punctuation to a meal.

A three-course dinner for two came to $37.75 . . ■

Why settle for second best?

In a recent J.D. Power and Associates survey of Linx® and Bell Atlantic Mobile customers, Linx ranked highest in customer satisfaction among business customers.

J.D. Power and Associates, one of America's leading marketing information firms, recently conducted a telephone survey among cellular users throughout Connecticut and in western Massachusetts.

The results were conclusive — J.D. Power and Associates ranked Linx "highest in overall customer satisfaction among business customers."

At Linx, we are totally committed to delivering cellular service that provides the highest satisfaction in each of the areas business customers indicate they value most:

1. Call quality and coverage
2. Customer service
3. Added-value services and benefits
4. Rapid problem resolution.

And all these efforts have paid off with the results of the J.D. Power and Associates customer satisfaction survey reporting that Linx outranked Bell Atlantic Mobile among business customers.

So why settle for second best? Call SNET MobileCom at 1-800-922-LINX and get the cellular service that's second to none — Linx.

Free-Wheeling Ideas Produce An Upheaval of Bold Forms

By BESS LIEBENSON

TO celebrate the Year of the American Craft, Creative Arts Workshop in New Haven will present several major craft exhibitions. "New Ceramics," displayed through May 22, marks the first time the workshop's major juried spring exhibition features crafts rather than fine arts.

The show of ceramic pieces from the United States and Canada was juried by a ceramist, Val Cushing, chairman of the division of ceramic art at Alfred University in upstate New York. "I was asked to choose approximately 100 slides from over 1,000 submitted," said Mr. Cushing, who has served on juries for exhibitions throughout the world, and as a teacher at major national and international art institutions, influenced a generation of ceramists. "There are some strong functional pots," he said, "imaginative vessels in which use is irrelevant."

"Ritual Vessel (19) V.92," a rustic teapot by Howard Koerth.

Use of Nontraditional Materials

The show also illustrates the strength of American ceramics, derived from diversity, free-wheeling imagination and inspired eclecticism, Mr. Cushing said. The works chosen reflect innovative directions in American ceramics today in three categories: sculpture, vessels and pottery. "The strength of the show is that it shows what is cutting edge in ceramics," said a board and faculty member of the workshop and an exhibiting ceramist, D. Hayne Bayless.

"The exhibition focuses not on one particular trend but is more an open embrace of nontraditional materials and techniques," he said. "There are pieces that are not entirely of clay. They include metal, wire and paint."

Everything Is Possible

The first view of the show is through the angled front window of the two-story gallery. The tone is set with Duane Brant's earthenware "Stability," an upside-down figure, and Donna Usher's terra cotta "Earth Sphere." The six-foot rustic figure, made of separate pots joined together, makes no attempt to smooth its ridges. Rather, they add immediacy and power. "Earth Sphere," a two-foot globe, looks like leather with puckers and folds suggesting hieroglyphics.

Parading everything from functional tableware to flamboyant sculptures not normally associated with ceramics, the case is made that everything is possible. The show takes viewers from a traditional blue and white floral teapot to a marverick, rainbow-hued, columnar sculpture blending clay and steel.

A maze of white platforms that become islands, cubes of different heights and individual shelves make each piece look important. But the noted standouts are the award winners.

Stark Black and White

Richard Haynes's set of four porcelain plates in stark black and white took third place. The flowing pattern uses a positive-negative design, reversing colors and creating mirror opposites. Mr. Bayless described the technique as "time-consuming and difficult."

Awarded second place is Howard Koerth's earthenware "Ritual Vessel (19) V.92," a rustic teapot. Its rough medieval-looking surface contrasts with the modern whimsical form, with a Henry Moore-like hole for a handle, a spout that looks like a cigar and a cup and saucer ingeniously used as a cover.

Lin Pei-Ching's "No. 1," made of clay, cement and pigment, took first place. One viewer, speculating on the meaning of the three-foot-square brown cube with separate compartments housing more than 700 white horses, ventured that it suggests infinity. Another said it reminded him of an archeological dig where ancient Chinese emperors were buried with objects in preparation for the hereafter.

"Many people ask these things," Ms. Pei-Ching, a graduate student in ceramics at the State University of New York at New Paltz, said in a telephone interview. Her intention, she said, was to have the character of horses roaming through a big cube: a building, jail or container for horses. "I wanted a powerful feeling," she said, "a strong inside pressure of horses wanting to break out — but they can't."

Photographs by Harold Shapiro

"No. 1," a work in clay by Lin Pei-Ching.

A set of four porcelain plates by Richard Haynes.

The show, a smorgasbord of different approaches, proves ceramics, like painting and sculpture, have been liberated from much of their tradition. At one end of the spectrum is James A. Jones's "Wired," a bust made of clay with paint, wire and a circuit board. The head, with a panel of electronic components sprouting curled wires, exudes a startled look. In a more playful mood, Debbie Sigel's untitled work — actually steel with clay encrustations — depicts a game. There are wire mesh-like fishnets, hoops and balls in flower and grass colors. Christopher Darling's pit-fired earthenware "Meals on Wheels No. 1," a pitcher, cup and saucer, creamers, plate and bowls, each on a dolly on wheels, attached by cord, moves like a train set.

Teapots in All Shapes

In classical contrast are a trio of earth-toned vessels set on small, white, separate shelves, befitting their importance and different artists. Teapots come in all manner of shape, traditional and free form. Mr. Bayless's hinged-lid stoneware coffee pot is somewhere in between; it resembles a coffee pot but sports a Modigliani-like stretched-out shape, made in three different sections and colored glazes.

"The potential of clay is practically limitless," Mr. Bayless said. "Viewers will be amazed by the variety of forms that clay has assumed. This show explodes a lot of preconceived notions." ■

UNDERSTANDING WHAT YOU NEED.

In a time when too many companies in Connecticut are closing their doors, one not only is flourishing, but also received Inc. Magazine's 1992 Entrepreneur of the Year award. And for good reason. Reflexite is innovative and aggressive. Exactly the qualities they look for in a bank.

You see, to keep up with the intense research and development demands of their business, Reflexite needed financing. They asked Shawmut Bank for help with the financing, and also asked us to respond quickly.

HELPING YOU MAKE IT HAPPEN.

In a few days we had the answer. And it was yes. We helped Reflexite with quick financing because at Shawmut, we are, and have been, actively lending to businesses in Connecticut. As members of the community, we understand the needs of local businesses. We also understand that these times demand special qualities not only in business people. But in their bank.

To find out if we're the right bank for your business, call 1-800-SHAWMUT.
